CULTIVATION OF POTATOES.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed as a House document an article by Dr. W. Behrend.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the following communication may be printed as a House document.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the communication is.

The Clerk read as follows:

An article on the cultivation of the potato, and its significance from e standpoint of political economy, by Dr. W. Behrend.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I object.

Mr. MARSHALL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection, at least until I can give an explanation.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, the article contains very valuable information with reference to the potato in connection with the manufacture of alcohol, in which we are all deeply interested. It is a matter that probably will not cost more than five or ten dollars to print, and one gentleman from Illinois asked me for a number of copies of this article this morning.

Mr. MANN. Oh, a great many people are asking for documents which I can not supply. It can be printed by the Agricultural Department as a farmers' bulletin. If this process is commenced in the House, there will be no end to it. I think I must object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

TANANA MINES RAILROAD IN ALASKA.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 25184.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25184) to relieve the Tanana Mines Railroad in Alaska from taxation.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Tanana Mines Railroad Company, or its successors, having a line of railroad under construction in the district of Alaska, shall be exempt from license tax and tax on its railway and railway property during the period of its construction and for five years thereafter: Provided, That the total period of exemption shall not exceed ten years from the time of the passage of this act: And provided further, That this exemption shall exist and operate only during the continuance of the construction of said road in good faith, and in the event of unnecessary delay in the construction and completion of said road the exemption from taxation herein provided shall cease, and said tax shall be collectible as to so much of said road as shall have been completed five years.

Sec. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what this is, anyhow.

Mr. POWERS. This is simply to exempt this railroad from the special-license tax, which has been granted to at least two other roads. This is a small road, of what you call a "narrow gauge," of which 26.2 miles have been completed, and the tax of $100 a mile would mean 8 per cent of the cost. It exempts them from the payment of this license tax for a certain time after the completion of the road. It is unanimously reported, as I understand, and simply in line, following the identical language, of what we have already granted to other roads.

Mr. LLOYD. What bill is that?

Mr. POWERS. It is the Tanana road, on which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Reid] put this proviso.

Mr. LLOYD. That is the remission of the license tax? Mr. POWERS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does it remit all the taxes on the

Mr. POWERS. I do not know anything about any other taxes but the license. It is in the identical language of the other bills. It is a very small matter, but it amounts to much to those who are to build the roads there.

Mr. MANN. Is this the third bill of this kind at this session of Congress? We passed a House bill the other day for We passed a House bill the other day for something like this.

Mr. POWERS. It was a similar bill.

Mr. MANN. And a Senate bill was passed the other day for a similar purpose.

Mr. POWERS. Yes. Mr. MANN. Is this the third bill?

Mr. POWERS. These are three different roads, and we are treating them all alike.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will this exem ation five years after it is completed? Will this exempt the railroad from tax-

Mr. POWERS. If they go on in good faith; but Congress reserves the right to amend, alter, and repeal this act. This is exactly the same language as was put in the exemption that was given to the Alaskan Central road. I have it here, if you desire to have it read, and it is copied verbatim.

Mr. FITZGERALD. From my recollection of the bill I do not recall that it contained a provision that the road should be exempt from taxes five years after the completion.

Mr. POWERS. Let me read you the provision which Congress passed in reference to the Alaskan Central road. Section 5 of the bill reads:

Said company shall be exempt from license tax and tax on its rail-road and railroad property during the period of its construction and for five years thereafter.

Mr. MANN. Was that provision in the bill as it passed the House's

Mr. POWERS. That provision was in the bill as it passed the House

It was not put in by conference? Mr. MANN.

Mr. POWERS. No, sir, Mr. Speaker, if I understand this bill, the exemption for taxation is for five years after the completion of the road. I know that we put in this usual clause that Congress shall have the right to alter, amend, or repeal, which we all know to be nothing; but I shall object unless the gentleman from Maine shall introduce some language making a definite period of time for the exemption.

Mr. POWERS. There is a part of the bill which provides

Mr. WILLIAMS. You say that this exemption shall be until five years after the completion?

Mr. LLOYD. Wait half a minute.
Mr. POWERS. That provision is in it.
Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Missouri calls my attention to the fact that just what I wanted placed in the bill is in it; so that the gentleman was mistaken in saying five years after the completion, because it says: "Provided, That the total period of exemption shall not exceed ten years from the I have no objection. passage of this act."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this is to aid the people of Alaska in an important matter. Our committee is beset from time to time with propositions to aid the railroads in Alaska, but thus far this Congress or our committee has not recommended any aid of any kind except to relieve them of the burden of the license tax. Under existing law a license tax of $100 per mile is levied on each mile of road as soon as it is completed. investigation of the matter our committee believe that if men will go to Alaska and actually construct a railroad, they ought to be relieved from taxation while they are constructing it and for a short time thereafter. We believe further that it is not improper to allow them to extend that time for five years after the completion of the road without paying a license tax, provided the exemption is for a reasonably limited number of

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question? Mr. LLOYD. Certainly. Mr. FINLEY. Does this bill exempt railroad property in towns in Alaska from taxation?

Mr. LLOYD. No, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman is sure of that?
Mr. LLOYD. Yes; because that was specifically brought out in the hearings, and no demand was made for anything of the

Mr. FINLEY. Is there anything in the bill covering that point?

Mr. LLOYD. The bill only exempts them from paying the license tax

Mr. FINLEY. That is, so much per mile. There are towns in Alaska, and railroads, I suppose, will run through the towns. I wish to know if there is any provision which will relieve them from paying a tax for municipal purposes.

Mr. LLOYD. There might be a part of a road in a town, but that is not a serious proposition in Alaska, because there are no towns of any consequence in Alaska.

Mr. FINLEY. But the gentleman realizes that towns must raise money for municipal purposes.

Mr. SULZER. Let me say to the gentleman from South Carolina that there is nothing in this bill that exempts the railroad company from any local taxation. This bill simply exempts it from a national license tax.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time,

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to. The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hardwick, a motion to reconsider the last

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Record some remarks I made yesterday respecting some features of the postal service.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25483—the post-office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, with Mr. Currier in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Goebel], on which the point of order had been reserved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet]. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 24, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "Provided, That in addition to the foregoing allowance and compensation of clerks and employees at first and second class post-offices there be allowed and paid to each a sum which, together with the allowance herein made, would equal 20 per cent upon the salary now fixed by law."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order until the gentleman from Ohio could explain the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized to discuss the merits of the proposition.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, the object of that amendment, as well as the amendment I have offered heretofore, is to provide an increase of 20 per cent to all postal employees, excluding postmasters and assistant postmasters. I was very much impressed yesterday with the tabulated statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Lorimer], showing the inequality of the contemplated increase provided for in this bill. By the amendment that I have offered the pay will be equalized, and the employee from the humblest position up to the highest grade would receive the same rate of increase. In my judging postmasters and assistant postmasters. I was very much grade would receive the same rate of increase. In my judgment the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads did not go far enough in the provisions that are offered here re-lating to the increase of pay. We all know that the cost of living has materially advanced, and that has affected every-We also know that there has been many resignations in the Post-Office Department by reason of this meager compensation and by reason of inducements that have been offered by others outside of the Government service, and I want to call the attention of this House to that portion of the report of the Postmaster-General, or rather of the Assistant Postmaster-General, in which he calls particular attention to that large increase of resignations in the Post-Office Department which has so materially affected that service. He says:

materially affected that service. He says:

From 12 per cent for the fiscal year the annual rate of resignations on the part of the clerks advanced to 19 per cent for the quarter ending September 30, and 21 per cent for the month of October. In the c.se of carriers the annual rate of resignations, which was 2.6 per cent for the fiscal year, rose to 3.5 per cent for the quarter, and to 4.1 per cent for the month of October.

It is evident from these statistics that the number of post-office employees resigning has increased with great rapidity during the past few months. The situation as regards the clerical service is particularly bad. The figures for October show that clerks were leaving the service at an annual rate exceeding 1 in every 5. Although clerks have been dropping out in much larger numbers than carriers, the latter employees are also resigning to a considerable extent. While it is impossible to determine exactly what proportion of the clerks and carriers who resigned since the beginning of the fiscal year have done so on the ground of inadequate pay, sufficient statistical information was received from the result of the recent inquiry to show that the resignations recently reported were very largely attributable to that cause.

Mr. Chairman, when we consider that higher wages are paid

Mr. Chairman, when we consider that higher wages are paid outside of the Government service, it can readily be seen that there is an inducement for these men to resign.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is clearly subject to the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 3 for the privilege of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to return to page 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Add after line 23, page 3, the following:
"To complete the work of printing and binding the opinions of assistant attorneys-general for the Post-Office Department, $10,000; and such printing and binding shall be done at the Government Printing Office."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to recur to page 8, the last item on that page, to which a point of order is now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. That was passed without prejudice?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. My understanding is it was temporarily passed over yesterday to be taken up this morning for a decision on the point of order, and I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. At the bottom of page 8 the last paragraph appropriates for twenty-three superintendents of delivery and superintendents of mails at not exceeding $2,700 each. The point of order was made to that as being contrary to existing law. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the act of July 2, 1836, providing for the organization of the Post-Office Department and postal service. It is under this statute that appropriations have been made from year to year providing for the expenditures of that service, and under section 2 requirement is made "that the Postmaster-General shall submit to Congress at the next and each annual session specific estimates of the sums of money expected to be required for the service of the Department in the subsequent year, commencing on the 1st day of July" under specific subheads of expenditure, one of which subheads is "Clerks for offices," and another "Miscellaneous." The act of March 2, 1889, begins as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and are hereby, appropriated for the service of the Post-Office Department, in conformity with the act of July 2, 1836.

And provision is then made for superintendents of mails and superintendents of delivery at salaries not exceeding 45 per cent of the salaries of the respective postmasters in even grades of $100 each, from $1,300 to $2,700, inclusive. No limitation is made as to the number, but authority is given under the organization act of 1836-

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair interrupt to inquire if that act of 1889 is found in an appropriation bill or not?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I think it is, but it is under the act of 1836, and specifically provides in the language of the act with reference to this classification.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana send both of the volumes to the desk?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I ask the attention of the Chair to these statutes, and submit that under them this authority for the appropriation of not to exceed 45 per cent of the salary of the postmaster is according to law.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, using the words of a Senator from Texas, the argument of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads could be patented for its novelty, but he could not obtain a patent on it because it is of no value. Now, Mr. Chairman, under the act of July 2, 1836, which he read, that the Postmaster-General shall submit to Congress the amount of money required for clerks of offices and miscellaneous, if under that act they can appropriate for superintendents of mails, for superintendents of delivery, officials in the Post-Office Department, it is perfectly clear that under that miscellaneous provision they could provide for seven, nine, or ten auditors instead of six. If under that miscellaneous provision to which he has referred they could appoint these officials in the Post-Office Department, might they not provide six, seven, or eight Assistant Postmasters-General as well? And, Mr. Chairman, this last provision which he read was on an appropriation bill. Does that make it in order now? They acted under that and appropriated the number of assistant mail superintendents of delivery and superintendents of mails. There is no objection to the number that they provided for, but the act of July 2, 1836, does not provide, in submitting to Congress the amount required for clerks in offices and for miscellaneous, that there shall be new officers placed upon the pay roll.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MURPHY] will yield, I would like to inquire if the word "twenty-three" was stricken out and "seventeen" inserted, if he would then be satisfied and withdraw the point of order?

Mr. MURPHY. I would.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I am perfectly willing to settle the matter by striking out "twenty-three" and inserting

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Mur-Hy] has the floor. Does the gentleman yield? PHY! has the floor.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I suggest that the Chair rule. I will withdraw my proposition and let the Chair decide the point of order. I only made it in the interest of time. I think the point of order is not well sustained by the statute

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish the attention of the Chair just a moment in order to explain that the provision of 1889, though it was carried in an appropriation bill, is in form to make it permanent law. The Chair will find in the Postal Rules and Regulations a copy of the act, where it is provided

The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to classify and fix the salaries of the clerks and employees attached to the first-class post-offices as hereinafter provided.

This classification in its terms makes it permanent law, and under that classification will be found the designations of superintendents of mails and superintendents of delivery. These positions are limited to 45 per cent of the salaries of the postmasters. Forty-five per cent of the salaries of the postmasters of the maximum grade of $6,000 is $2,700, which is the salary carried in the present appropriation bill. I contend that there can be no question whatsoever by virtue of this classification act that these positions are covered by permanent law, and this item in the bill is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The act of 1889, which undoubtedly is existing law, although carried in an appropriation bill, provides that the Postmaster-General is authorized to classify and fix the salaries of various employees, but that does not give to the Postmaster-General the power to increase the numbers, as it seems to the Chair. Now, can the gentleman suggest to the Chair whether there is any provision in that statute of 1889, or any other statute, which gives the Postmaster-General power to increase the force?

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, Mr. Chairman, while there is no authority to increase the force, still it follows that this appropriation bill, by virtue of the original enactment of 1836—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair might say to the gentleman that the act of 1836, in the opinion of the Chair, has no bearing whatever upon this matter. That simply permits estimates to be submitted, and the submission of estimates never authorizes an appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as this is a very important matter, that would affect every item in the appropriation bill where there are increases required by reason of the growth of the service, I ask unanimous consent that it go over for the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Staf-FORD] asks unanimous consent that this matter may be passed without prejudice for the present. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer after the word "dollars," in line 2, page 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROMER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter clerks and carriers in first and second class cities shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $600; second grade, salary $500; third grade, salary $900; fourth grade, salary $1,000; fifth grade, salary $1,100; sixth grade, salary $1,200.

Clerks and carriers in second-class offices shall be promoted successively to the second and third grades, and clerks and carriers in first-class offices to the second, third, and fourth grades at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's service in the next lower grade. No promotion shall be made except upon evidence satisfactory to the Post-Office Department of the efficiency and faithfulness of the employee during the preceding year. The Department may reduce a clerk or carrier from a higher to a lower grade whenever his efficiency falls below a fair standard or whenever necessary for the purpose of discipline. When a clerk or a carrier has been reduced in salary he may be restored to his former grade or advanced to an intermediate grade at the beginning of any quarter following the reduction, on evidence that his record has been satisfactory during the intervening period. When a clerk or carrier fails of promotion because of unsatisfactory service, he may be promoted at the beginning of the second quarter thereafter, or of any subsequent quarter, on evidence that his record has been satisfactory during the intervening period. No promotion shall be made in the clerk or carrier grades except at the beginning of a quarter. Clerks and carriers of the sixth grade shall be eligible for promotion to the higher positions in the post-office.

Auxiliary employees to be paid for actual service at the rate of 30 cents an hour: Provided, That such employees shall be required to work not less than two hours daily: And provided further, That such employees shall be eligible for appointment as clerks and carriers of the first grade.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.
Mr. 'CROMER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CROMER. To ask that the Clerk turn over the page and read the rest of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Enough of the amendment has been read to show that it is clearly subject to a point of order. The Chair has the right whenever enough of an amendment has been read to show that it is subject to a point of order to entertain the point

Mr. CROMER. I wish the gentleman would reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana insists upon a ruling, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to substitutes for clerks at first and second class est-offices on vacation, $100,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 10, page 15, by inserting after the word "clerks" the words " and employees."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, page 15, after the word "clerks," insert "and employees." The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post-offices, $3,150,000: Provided, That there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post-office for rent a sum in excess of $400, nor more than $80 for fuel and light in any one year: And provided further, That the Postmaster-General may, in the disbursement of this appropriation, apply a part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for the use of post-offices of the first, second, and third classes, at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly, for a term not exceeding ten years.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph by inserting after the word "hundred," in line 14, the words "and eighty."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 14, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and eighty."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, or I will reserve it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I wish the gentleman would reserve the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I reserve it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph fixes the maximum rental for room for third-class post-offices at $400 a The whole matter is in the discretion of the Postmastervear. General.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If my colleague will permit an interruption, I am disposed to accept that amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I will be glad to have it ac-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I want to know, if the amendment is accepted, if the gentleman desires to continue his remarks?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not if it is accepted.
Mr. MACON. I make the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas on the point of order.

Mr. MACON. It is new legislation; but I would like to have the amendment read again.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not seem to the Chair that it is subject to the point of order; and the Chair overrules the point of order.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers at offices already established, city-delivery service, $24,100,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows: .

Page 17, strike out lines 12, 13, and 14 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For pay of letter carriers at offices already established, including substitutes for carriers absent without pay, city-delivery service, $24,100,000."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of substitute, auxiliary, and temporary letter carriers at offices already established, $1,200,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 17, strike out lines 15, 16, and 17 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For pay of substitutes for letter carriers absent with pay and to auxiliary and temporary letter carriers at offices already established, $1,200,000."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For horse-hire allowance, and the rental of vehicles, $750,000; and the sum of $5,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. MURPHY. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question in reference to this item? I noticed that this is for rental of vehicles. The custom, as I understand it, is for the Government to rent a number of collection wagons, etc., in the large cities and pay $400, which includes the rental of the horse and a very cheap wagon. Has the gentleman considered, since his connection with the Post-Office Committee, the desirability of the Government itself owning these horses and wagons? It is true in my city, and it is true certainly in this city, frequently that the horses that deliver the House mail are almost skeletons. As I see them in Chicago, the carrier has to almost get out and push them along. There is a constant complaint of post-office officials that they have no control of the matter at all. An advertisement is made, a contract is let for the use and maintenance of this horse and wagon at what seems to be an extravagant price. The service is abominable. I do not know whether it is desirable for the Government to own the horses and wagons or not. I see here is a proposition including the renting of vehicles. We now make the contracts under which we obtain that service under this very item, and I hope that we may have information from the gentleman as to whether he has investigated in regard to the policy which ought to be pursued, because I have great faith in 'he judgment of the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation for horse-hire allowance is to cover the expenses incident to mounted carriers and collectors of mail who are obliged to use horses and vehicles. It has been carried in the law for many years, and, as Members will recognize, is in the interest of the expedition of the collection and delivery of mail. For the last several months the Department has been experimenting with reference to the rent of automobiles in the collection of mail and also in the distribution, which results in great expedition of the service. Testimony was given before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to the effect that while the charge for the individual automobile, including the driver, was considerable, yet the territory over which that vehicle could dispatch mail and from which it could collect it was so large that it covered two or three or four collection districts where the mail was collected and distributed by the carrier with the aid of a horse and vehicle. Those individual mounted carriers who were displaced from the collection and delivery by horse and vehicle were then utilized in other parts of the territory and were not put out of the service. It was found. however, that great economy resulted from that change of practice. For example, I think in the city of Baltimore the experiment was very satisfactory, not only on account of the topography of the city, of the hills up which the wagons were obliged to be hauled, resulting in retarding the delivery of the mails, but, taking into consideration the number of mounted carriers to one district covered by an automobile, it resulted in a very material reduction of total expense.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by "mounted

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I mean those who use a horse and vehicle in the distribution of the mail in the scattered districts of the city.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that they are not

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. A mounted carrier is a carrier who is mounted on a horse.

I think if there is any district in the United States that demands such facilities it is the district which I represent, which is perhaps the largest city district in the country. We have not a mounted carrier in the district, alcountry. We have not a mounted carrier in the district, aithough it is a sparsely settled territory, but we have a number of horses and wagons for collection purposes.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. This covers that,
Mr. MANN. I think that is all this item really covers,
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. There are some four or five hundred contracts where they contract with an individual for the use of the horse and wagon, and in perhaps 2,000 other instances they make a specific allowance for the use of the horse.

Mr. MANN. That is what I was trying to get information from the gentleman about. In our town they contract with a central contractor, who furnishes a horse and wagon from a livery stable at this place and a horse and wagon from a livery stable at that place for different sections of the city. The service is abominable.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I wanted, if I could, to answer the inquiry of the gentleman relative to the advisability of the Government owning the wagons. That proposition has been recommended by the Postmaster-General. The statement has been made before the committee to the effect that if-

Mr. STAFFORD: Did not the recommendation refer only to the screen wagons rather than to the collection service?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That was with reference to an experiment concerning the screen-wagon service—with reference to the ownership by the Government of a certain number of screen wagons and harness, and then to have an appropriation to cover the hiring of the horses. The committee did not approve of the ownership of any of these vehicles, believing that once the Government bought and owned the wagons and harness and rented the horses, and then hired a driver, that the next step would unquestionably be a new classification, of Government drivers for these wagons; and the committee felt that it could not at this time recommend the appropriation for the purchase of these wagons. There has been no consideration, however, by the committee and no recommendation of the Department for the purchase and ownership of the small vehicles which are now furnished by the carriers under this item for horse-hire allowance.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman that next year at least he consider this proposition of allowing to a carrier in a city, who is required to drive a horse and vehicle, an allowance of some kind, so that the carrier may maintain his own horse and wagon and keep it in good order rather than pay to somebody $400 and upward to furnish the same thing from a livery stable, in very poor condition.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman that that is the very general practice now, of making an allowance out of this very item of appropriation.

Mr. MANN. There are a great many complaints in our country about it.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The evidence before the committee is to the effect that there are 2,300 mounted carriers. The most of them have an allowance for horse hire, and the others are contract. So the contracts referred to are the limited number of instances and not the majority.

Mr. MANN. They have the authority?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. They have the authority to cover that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why is this deficiency appropriation item carried here?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. For the reason that the service in large cities has developed so much more rapidly than the original estimate last year that there is going to be a decided deficiency for the remainder of the fiscal year, and this is to provide against that contingency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not let the Department go to the proper place for deficiencies?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. In my judgment the Department has gone to the proper place in laying it before the Post-Office Committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the rules of the House it is not the proper place to apply for a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. This is not a deficiency, and therefore under the rules of the House the Appropriations Committee could not take this particular item and appropriate for it. But there will be a deficiency between the 4th of March and the 1st of July, and this merely makes $5,000 available during the remainder of the fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Many of the deficiencies carried in the general deficiency bill are for deficiencies after the 4th of March and before the 1st of July. Congress passed a statute prohibiting Departments from creating deficiencies. Some ingenious man in some Department found out that instead of having the apportionment made in accordance with the law he could come in and ask for a deficiency, and they have been going to different committees and having parts of appropriations made immediately available, and thus nullifying the effect of the act.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have no quarrel with the Appropriation Committee, and, indeed, I approve of the general provision of law against creating deficiencies. But the gentleman from New York will appreciate that with such a rapidly growing service as the postal service the most skillful expert may fall short of accurate estimates for a year to come, and while last year the estimate for this particular item was supposed to be accurate, the service has grown so rapidly during the present fiscal year that it is quite apparent that if no provision is made for this additional $5,000 some of the larger cities will find the service crippled for want of that appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. The Department can submit this deficiency to the proper committee.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. There is no deficiency yet. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri insist on his point of order?

Mr. MURPHY. I want to ask a question of the chairman st. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if I understand him correctly that the horse hire and rent of vehicles is for collecting and distributing the mail?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Then why not say so in the bill? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I may say that all of these appropriations are for the collection and delivery of mail.

Mr. MURPHY. Yes; and we thought that in another bill that left this House, and it afterwards developed that the appropriation had been made and the money expended by the chief of a bureau in running around over the country attending political conventions and other things not pertaining to the business of the Department of the Government. Now, take this provision and the next provision, and they could take the money there appropriated and pay car fare or use it for other purposes than for what this appropriation is intended. I say it is out-side of the business, that the amendment as it stands is not for the business of the Post-Office Department, but could be used for other purposes.

Does the gentleman from Missouri insist The CHAIRMAN.

on his point of order?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the gentleman's. attention to the fact that the first part of the bill provides that the money is appropriated for the service of the Post-Office Department, and all the items in the bill are confined to the service of the Post-Office Department without further specification.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that the last clause in the paragraph being subject to a point of order makes the whole proposition subject to a point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have

Page 17, add lines 21 and 22, as follows: "For horse hire allowance and the rental of vehicles, $750,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

For inland transportation by star routes, including temporary service to newly established offices, $7,250,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for continuance of any star-route service the patronage of which shall be served entirely by the extension of rural delivery service, nor shall any of said sum be expended for the establishment of new star-route service for a patronage which is already entirely served by rural delivery service: Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is authorized to provide difficult or emergency mail service in Alaska, including the establishment and equipment of relay stations, in such manner as he may think advisable without advertising therefor.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after "service," in line 4, page 19, the following:

"But in no case shall a fourth-class post-office be discontinued unless thirty days' previous notice shall have been given to the Representative or Delegate in Congress from the district embracing such post-office, who shall be heard, if he desires, in opposition to the discontinuance, and then no discontinuance of the office shall be made unless it shall clearly appear to be in the interest of the patrons of the office and the public service." public service

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Hr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the fact that the amendment is subject to a point of order. I have adopted the suggestion made by the chairman of the committee

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he let this go out on a point of order and offer the other amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I then offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after "service," in line 4, page 19, the following: "But in no case shall a fourth-class post-office be discontinued unless fifteen days' previous notice shall have been given to the Representative or Delegate in Congress from the district embracing such post-office, who may be heard, if he desires, in opposition to the discontinuance."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I raise the point of order.

I reserve the point of order. CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the The CHAIRMAN.

point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman that I think he had better make that thirty days. Mr. CLAYTON. I did; but the chairman made the point of order against the thirty days, and this is the best I can get.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It ought to be done.

Mr. GARRETT. Does this provide that notice shall be given for discontinuance of a rural route?

Mr. CLAYTON. No; it just applies to fourth-class post-

Mr. GARRETT. Can not the gentleman make his amendment apply to that?

Mr. CLAYTON. If I did, the chairman would make a point of order and it would go out, and I prefer that the gentleman offer his own amendment. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course I have no interest in the matter, but here is a proposition. While I think the Post-Office Department ought to give notice, while I think it would be advisable if they had a regulation giving notice, it seems to me a very dangerous piece of legislation to provide that a Department of the Government can not do something in a district until it notifies the Member of Congress from that district. It is an entire departure from the whole theory of our Government.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman permit me to say that the practice, according to my experience, was until recently to give the Member of Congress notice of the intention to abolish fourth-class post-office, and his advice was asked. Recently the Department has departed from that custom, and now the order of discontinuance is made before the Member of Congress or the patrons of the office, in many cases, know anything about it, and then the patrons come with their complaint and make a protest to the Member of Congress. He goes to the Department for a reestablishment of the post-office or a revocation of the order of discontinuance, and it is promptly refused. I do not think that it impairs the usefulness of the administration of the Post-Office Department to require them to go back to what they did heretofore as a matter of courtesy to the Members of Congress and let them give this notice to the Member of Congress

It does not take away any power or discretion from the De-It does not militate against any freedom in the exercise of full administrative powers, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order. This invitation to the Representative would be really no new departure. He is now authorized by law to nominate cadets to the United States Military Academy and midshipmen to the United States Naval Academy, and is called on to indorse the applications of national banks before they can do business.

This amendment would not prevent the Post-Office Department from abolishing any post-office. It would merely afford an opportunity to the people most interested to be heard in a matter that affects them to a very important extent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a remark or two. The gentleman from Illinois is as well posted on nearly everything as any man in the House is. I acknowledge that, and he does a great deal of good here, but this is a thing he does not know anything at all about. [Laughter.] He has no rural post-offices in his district. As a matter of fact the Post-Office Department has treated me very well about it. The trouble is that the thing is practically done before we get notice. I have gone over there and induced them to revoke three or four orders abolishing post-offices, but they always hang them up until they can investigate. trouble is that the Post-Office Department officials do not know and in the very nature of things can not know the local conditions as well as Representatives know them. I will give you two samples. There is a little post-office in my district that has been there for a hundred years. It was a sort of historical place, and the patrons did not want it to be abolished on that There were thirty-four families who were not served account. in that neighborhood by the rural route, and the Department issued an order that it should be abolished. The people there wrote me in great alarm, and I went over there and got that order hung up and finally revoked. Now, another case: Everybody knows the habits of Catholics. There is a little place where there is a post-office and a large Catholic church. The Catholics all go to church on Sunday a great deal more than we Protestants do; and they want, at that particular place, to get their mail on Sunday when they go to church because of both convenience and habit. It is in a hilly region where the rural routes do not serve the community very well. The first thing I knew the Department issued an order to abolish that post-office, discommoding everybody in the community who is a Catholic, and nearly everybody is a Catholic. Of course the Department did not know the local condition. I wrote the Department a letter, and I went over afterwards and succeeded in fixing that up. If I had been given notice of the order in the first place about that old historical post-office or the postoffice in that Catholic neighborhood, the Department would have gotten information so they would have never issued the order to abolish these offices about which these people took the trouble to write and telegraph me. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just one ord. The gentleman from Missouri has stated, I think correctly, that the gentleman from Illinois, with all of his large experience here and in a great city, does not know the difficulties with which the country Congressman has to contend in this matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to concede that to the gentleman without further argument if he will further concede the gentleman also does not know anything about the difficulties the city Congressmen have to contend with, but still legislate in regard to them.

Mr. CLAYTON. I readily admit you know more about city affairs and post-offices and postal business there than any country Congressman.

Mr. MANN. I do not pretend to know about the country business

Mr. CLAYTON. But we, who represent the great farming districts here and who are more interested in rural service and small post-offices, know more about that branch of the service than you do, with due deference to you.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield—
Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I can call the attention of this House as to how the rule has worked in my district. Several very worthy gentlemen from the State of Massachusetts, from the district represented, I believe, by Mr. Greene here on this floor, went, several years ago, into the district I They went into what was then practically a longleaved yellow-pine forest and established a flourishing school. They have built up a fine little village there of several hundred population in that splendid country. The Post-Office Department extended the rural service through that country. The rural delivery service was made to take in this village. The Post-Office Department, without giving these people the opportunity to be heard previously, without giving the opportunity to be heard by the Representatives in Congress, abolished that fourth-class office. That was a hardship. They have no bank there. The pupils who attend in that school are for the most part poor boys and girls, worthy and ambitious, who receive their allowance for board and tuition almost altogether in the shape of post-office money orders.

When they had the post-office there, when they received the post-office money orders, the post-office took the place of a bank, and they cashed their post-office money orders in the village of Now they have got to go about 7 miles to the nearest money-order office in order to have their little money orders cashed. It would not entail any expense upon the Government to restore this post-office, and it would be a great public convenience, and that is what the Post-Office Department is for. Everybody recognizes the fact that that branch of the Government never was established to make money; and everybody knows that, barring the first twenty-five years in the history of our country, the Post-Office Department has never made any money. It has always run behind, and I glory in the fact that this country does not stop when it comes to consider the postoffice supply bill to ask the question as to whether it will pay to have the best postal service. We extend this service, a Government monopoly, and being a Government monopoly, in the interest of the people. We ought not to stop to count any reasonable cost. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word on the merits of the pending amendment: We can not hope to retain all of the little fourth-class post-offices and at the same time extend the rural delivery service. I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the very urgent demand on the part of a very limited number of individuals throughout the country who think that the fourth-class post-offices should be continued even though the rural free-delivery service should be extended to cover the territory. But that can not follow if we are expected to have a proper administration of the rural delivery service. However, Mr. Chairman, I have no personal objection to a limited provision of law which will avoid a too sudden discontinuance of the fourth-class post-offices.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Speaking from the standpoint of a Representative of a country district, the amendment which is pending, it seems to me, would impose the sole responsibility upon the Congressman, and if a post-office should be discontinued and this amendment should be in operation, the patrons dissatisfied with the discontinuance of the office would blame the Congressman, whereas now the Representative may properly locate the responsibility upon the Post-Office Department and in a degree exonerate himself. I suggest this-that if a notice be given it ought to be given to the postmaster of the office that it is proposed to discontinue, and not to the Representative in Congress. The postmaster then could notify the patrons, and they could reach the Department through their Representative.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I think that is a good sug-

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Is not that done now?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That is done now.
Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. They certainly do not abolish these offices without notifying anybody of the proposed abolition?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is done without notifying us. Mr. CLAYTON. I want to interrupt the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. I want to say to the gentleman that the suggestion of his colleague from Indiana would not meet the case at all.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I had not been permitted to complete my answer to him.

Mr. CLAYTON. And if the gentleman will permit me-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit me to complete what I had started to say, I will state to my colleague from Indiana that it is a good suggestion to have the notice posted in the post-office. I understand that that is now done, substantially, by notifying the postmaster. He may not individually post the notice, but he ought to do it. But, in addi-tion to that, I have no personal objection to the Member of Congress or Delegate being notified at the same time and given an opportunity to be heard. But I would oppose any protracted delay in the investigation which would result in a continuation of the office after the establishment of the rural delivery service. Therefore I would not interpose an objection to a provision which would supplement the existing practice of notification to postmasters, with authority to have the Member of Congress notified as well.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then I understand the gentleman as not objecting to this amendment?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I am not objecting to that. I do not think it is very essential, but I can see no special embarrassment to the service.

Mr. CLAYTON. If I may be allowed to say it, it is essential to this extent: Those who have gone through an experience similar to mine know that they do not learn of the opposition to the abolishment of a post-office, in nine cases out of ten, until it is abolished, and then complaint is made to the Member of Congress. As to the suggestion of the other gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], that a Congressman could be relieved of blame, I do not want to be relieved of blame in the way he suggests. I want legislation here that will give me notice that I can "do my best," and I believe it is in the language of Kipling, "leave the rest." I am satisfied that my people will justify me after I have done my best, and I think it is a poor excuse for us for the House of Representatives to leave the law as it is, supposing that we can dodge the responsibility and place it on the Post-Office Department.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, I will say, for the information of some Members who have made inquiry, that I have met with the difficulty similar to that to which the gentleman from Alabama has referred, and the first knowledge that I have had of any such action being contemplated was being notified by the postmaster that the post-office inspector had recently been to his office and had declared it was the intention of the Department to abolish the office, and the work had practically been completed without any notification to myself or to anyone in-terested in the office. None of the patrons were notified of the intention of the Department to consider the question, and they received no notification even that the office itself was to be abolished.

N. May I interrupt the gentleman? Will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. GREENE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any Mr. PAYNE. postmaster in his district whose office was abolished without being notified of the fact that it was to be abolished? Would he not immediately communicate that knowledge to both the Member of Congress and the patrons of the office?

Mr. GREENE. Yes; I have.
Mr. PAYNE. Well, I understand that may be practiced now, although since I have come to Congress no office has been abolished in my district without notice to the Representative. I understand that notification is sent to the postmaster that an order is made for the abolition of the post-office. postmaster who is wide awake to the condition there is no difficulty whatever. He will both notify the patrons of the office and the Representative in Congress. I do not like a statute that mixes up legislation with a Representative in Congress in these matters. Why, we will come to see that it is being required the Representative in Congress be notified, and requested to recommend somebody for a post-office in the different offices.

Mr. CLAYTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman that

Mr. GREENE. This is coming out of my time.
Mr. CLAYTON. I just want to say, in reply to the gentleman from New York, one thing, and that is that notice to and consent of a Member of Congress is already a prerequisite in the establishment of a rural free delivery route. This is no innovation. We all know that it is no use writing to the Post-Office Department asking for a free rural route to be established unless the application is indorsed by a Member of Congress.

Mr. MANN. By regulation. Mr. CLAYTON. By law, I think.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that there is any such law. There is no law of that kind.

Mr. CLAYTON. - It is the practice of the Department to do it; and I think it is a matter of law.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that if he can show me that that is a matter of law, so far as I am concerned I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is a regulation at least, and it is uniformly done under this regulation of the Department. It is tantamount to a law, for the regulation is invariably followed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is en-

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to tire the House with any of my experiences, but I will say this: I had one office in which I had a peculiar experience. It had been made to the company of the established for eighty-six years. There was business in connection with that office, and considerable business of importance to the patrons of the office. The postmaster connected with that The postmaster connected with that office was not consulted by the post-office inspector. He came there; he passed by the postmaster, passed by the patrons, and inadvertently, by communication made to some friend located there, my attention was called to the proposition. The postoffice inspector referred to the fact in his report that the postmaster and the rural free-delivery carriers had communicated with me to prevent the abolishment of the office, and for that reason he thought the office ought to be abolished. I have seen the inspector's report, and protested against the reference to myself, for I had never had any communication with the officials referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objec-

[After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREENE. I made objection to the abolishment of the office and corresponded with the Department by letters. I had written four different letters endeavoring to obtain information, more than two weeks' time having passed since the first of those four letters was written, and finally I followed that correspondence with a telegram, and still I received absolutely no reply from the First Assistant Postmaster-General's office to any of the communications relative to the office. On the 5th day of January I offered a resolution of inquiry in this House in order that I might obtain the information which I had tried to procure by correspondence and by telegram. I did not press the resolution, because after offering the same, and the Department having been informed that I had offered a resolution of inquiry. within two hours from the time the resolution had been offered the full information I had so anxiously and earnestly sought from the Department was furnished.

Now, I refer to this matter because I have found that difficulty referred to, and I have conferred with other Members of Congress who have informed me that they have met with the same difficulty. This was the occasion of the offering of this motion to cure the trouble, if possible.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. How will this amendment cure that?

Mr. GREENE. The Members would have some notice of contemplated changes at any rate, of an official character; but my great objection to the present method is that the post-office inspector, who never has had any skill in taking care of postoffices, except in looking after thieves and robbers, who has but a limited knowledge as to how to establish a rural free-delivery route or how to establish or discontinue a fourth-class postoffice, does not give the consideration that any ordinary man would give, but proceeds by a ruthless method to prepare for the destruction of the office without conferring either with the patrons or the Member of Congress.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama was intended to remedy an existing evil from which many communities have suffered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Clayron] that if the gentleman from Illinois does not insist on the point of order to the amendment in its present form, I shall do so. If the gentleman will modify it so as to provide for notifying the postmaster, I will not raise the point of order, so far as I am concerned, to that,

Mr. CLAYTON. I suggested to the gentleman a while ago that that would not accomplish anything; that I apprehend-

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, well; I can not think that the gentleman has any postmaster in his district that would be so remiss as not to notify—

Mr. CLAYTON. I am not responsible for the gentleman's thought or want of thought.

Mr. PAYNE. I can not believe that the Government has, in the gentleman's district, a postmaster who would be so remiss as not to notify the patrons and the Representative in Congress. I know I should hear from it in twenty-four hours if there was any post-office in my district where the postmaster was notified that the post-office was to be discontinued, and I can not think that there is a postmaster in the United States who would not immediately notify the Representative in Congress and notify the patrons. I do not believe in legislating to make us responsible in any degree, to take the initiative in these matters one way or the other. Let the people of the locality present their wants to us and then we will represent them in the Department. But I do not believe in making the Representative take the initiative in any of these matters.

Mr. GREENE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MANN. Just a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insist on his point of order.

Will the Chair yield to me for just a word?

Mr. MANN. Will the Chair yield to me for just a word? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, so far as information in regard to rural free delivery is concerned, I would at all times be willing to receive information and learning from my distinguished friend from Alabama or my distinguished friend from Missouri. I pretend to no knowledge upon that subject. But this amendment goes far beyond the question of rural free delivery. hear in this House of the encroachments of the executive upon the legislative branch of the Government, but this is the first time within my recollection when it has been proposed seriously to make a Member of Congress a portion of the administrative branch of the Government. If Members of Congress are to become a part of the Post-Office Department, why not also make them a part of the Interior Department? Why should not a Member of Congress be notified when a forest reserve is to be Member of Congress be notified when a forest reserve is to be created? Why should not a Member of Congress be notified when any other service is to be performed by any of the other administrative branches of the Government?

Mr. SHERLEY. Would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment that required general notice before action taken, without regard to it being simply notice to the Congress-

Mr. MANN. I would not have any objection at all. That is an administrative part on which I will yield, so far as my I would not have any objection at all. That is knowledge is concerned, to the gentlemen who are acquainted with that. My objection to the amendment is that it directly brings the legislative branch of the Government into the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman and myself agree as to the merits of the proposition. The complaint is that action is taken by the Department, ordering post-offices discontinued, before any sort of notice is given to the postmaster or anybody else in the case complained of. Now, it is true that in some cases notice is given that unless the patrons of the office furnish the Department with the name of a proper person to act as postmaster when there is a resignation or a vacancy or when a removal is ordered for cause, that the office will be discontinued. Notice is given to the patrons of the post-office in that case.

But what we complain of here is that the post-office inspector will investigate either a rural route or inspect a post-office and in his report recommend that that office be abolished, and the office is abolished, and no notice whatever is given to the postmaster or to the Member of Congress or anybody else.

Mr. MANN. I will say, as far as the postmaster is concerned, I think notice ought to be given to somebody, but while, as a matter of courtesy and desirable administration, the administrative branch of the Government often consults the legislative branch, it ought not to be a matter of law, and, as far as I am concerned, never will be if I can prevent it.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman and myself agree that notice should be given before the office is discontinued?

Mr. MANN. So far as that is concerned, I have neither knowledge or opinion, and I do not want to interfere with it.

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman think that it would be much easier for the patrons of the office, through their Representative or otherwise, to take some action before judgment is rendered than it would be after the office had been ordered to be discontinued?

I have stated my position, Mr. Chairman, Mr. MANN.

OVERSTREET of Indiana. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). The gentleman from Indiana will state it.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Has the point of order been made against this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that it was reserved.

Mr. MANN. I will insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I ask for a ruling,
Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reply to some of the remarks made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the discussion on the point of order alone must prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment clearly involves a change of existing law and therefore is out of order. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the transmission of mall by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $1.250,000; and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts not exceeding, in the aggregate, $1,388,759, under the provisions of the law, for a period not exceeding ten years: Provided, That said service shall not be extended in any cities other than those in which the service is now under contract under authority of Congress, except the Borough of Brooklyn, of the city of New York, and the cities of Baltimore, Md.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Kansas City, Mo.; Pittsburg, Pa., and San Francisco, Cal.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the point of order presented.

Mr. SHERLEY. Before I urge the point of order I would like to have some explanation from the chairman of the Post-Office Committee in regard to this proviso limiting this appropriation to certain-named cities, both as to the law for it and the reason for it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the reservation of the point of order covers others besides what the gentleman stated. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has reserved the point of order on the proviso only.

Mr. MANN. Then I reserve a point of order on the balance of the paragraph.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, under the act of June 13, 1903, is the following provision of the law. The act I have just referred to is the general annual appropriation bill, and I submit to the Chair that as far as the provision I am offering is concerned, it is permanent law.

The provision for the transmission of mail by pneumatic service and the general method of advertisement and inspection before the contracts are made are recited. Then follows this:

That the Postmaster-General shall not, prior to June 30, 1904, enter into contracts under the provisions of this act involving an annual expenditure in the aggregate in excess of $800,000, and thereafter—

Now, that language undoubtedly fixes it as permanent lawand thereafter when such contracts shall be made as may from time to time be provided for in the annual appropriation act for the postal service, and all provisions of law contrary to this herein contained are repealed.

Under that act contracts were authorized and entered into for the establishment of pueumatic-tube service in the cities of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and New York.

Last year provision was made to extend this service to five additional cities, naming them in the act. Prior to the action, however, of the Post-Office Committee, and under the operation of another section of the act of 1902, a commission, duly authorized by the Postmaster-General, had made a tour of inspection of various cities and made a report in favor of the extension of this service to the five cities which the Post-Office Committee in this bill last year recommended. The only change which was made in last year's appropriation act was the language that it shall not be extended in any States other than those in which the service is now under contract, under authority of Congress, except the five named in the law, and then the appropriation is made to cover those contracts.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand the gentleman, the original act did not limit the cities to which this pneumatic service could be extended?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It did not.

Mr. SHERLEY. But it is undertaken now by proviso to limit and narrow an existing law to certain-named cities only?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The act which I read provided that contracts for this service should not be entered into except as provided from time to time in the annual appropriation bill, and we made the provision last year for five additional cities.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but the gentleman is not providing affirmatively for the service in certain cities, but is saying that service shall not be entered into for any cities except certain

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. This was simply the negative way of stating the proposition. The situation does not bar any other cities which might be provided for in the act. do not provide for any except the ten.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana kindly send to the Chair the act which he read?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say that following the act of last year the propositions were advertised, inviting proposals for the extension of this service. Proposals were offered and accepted for the installation of additional service in the cities of New York and Chicago, I think, and Philadelphia. No proposals were offered for any one of these five new cities and that authority still stands.

Mr. SHERLEY. Was any proposal sought for those cities? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The advertisement was

Mr. SHERLEY. And for those only?

Mr. SHERLEY. And for those only?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. And for those only.
Mr. SHERLEY. Has any investigation been made by the Post-Office Department looking to the advisability of establishing this service in other cities of greater magnitude than those named? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I understand so, and even in the report of last year they gave a very extensive recount of their investigations, and in connection with the recommendation for these cities gave reasons why they did not recommend certain other cities which had already been inspected.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, on the merits of the proposition, what his judgment is in reference to the pneumatictube service? I may say to him that from my own observation of the pneumatic-tube service in Chicago I had about concluded that it was a pure fake.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman that it is very highly approved by the officers of the Department. They had some difficulty in the installation of the servment. They had some dimently in the installation of the service in Chicago, which, I think, grew out of some embarrassments in putting in the tubing. The depth at which they were originally placed, it seemed, was not below the freezing line, and whether on account of the peculiarity of the soil or the failure of the contractor, they did not operate successfully at first. I understand that since then they have been successfully operated.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that where this pneumatic-tube service extends to the postal stations in the city there is constant and bitter complaint from the employees in the stations. They say that it is of no value, that it is noisy and hot, and makes it disagreeable to do work, and does not expedite. Now, I myself do not know.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not know what the difficulty may be in Chicago. I am not fully advised upon the details with reference to that city. I know that quite the contrary is true in the city of New York, where they are clamoring for even larger extension, and only a day or two ago one of the Members from the city of New York stated on the floor of the House that the service was very highly commended in that city.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask if it is not likely that this is due to faulty construction in Chicago?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I stated that I had understood that it was the difficulty there, but I am not at all sure about that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they are all constructed by the same company, in the same manner, on the same basis; they are all owned by one company and operated by one company.

Mr. ELLIS. That might be true and still—

Mr. MANN. And that company is at work all the time to extend the service.

Mr. ELLIS. Now, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the elimination of this paragraph through the point of order or otherwise would jeopardize this authorization of last year?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I think not, Mr. Chairman. My judgment is-and I wish to call this to the attention of the Chair-that while I make no admission that the point of order will probably lie against the paragraph, I think that there is no doubt that it does not lie as against existing contracts which were authorized under the act of 1902 where they are actually in operation and payment has been made for several years and ought to be provided for in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, do I understand the gentleman to say that this item covers part of existing contracts?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Why undoubtedly it covers every contract in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, and St. Louis.

Of course a proper item of appropriation to provide for existing contracts would not be subject to a point of order, but here is a proposition to authorize directly-which will require legislation—the Postmaster-General to enter into new contracts, fixing the amount of the new contracts. I do not find anything in the bill which provides for the payment of anything else. There is no item of appropriation in the paragraph—Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, the very first few lines of the paragraph cover an appropriation there, and I will say

Mr. MANN. That is true.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana (continuing). That this language simply follows the language of the other provisions of law which began with the original authority and has continuously been carried in bills, added to only last year by addition of these five cities, and I insist that, so far as the items appropriating for the contracts which have been in service, there is no question about their being secure against the point of order, and I do not think the gentleman from Illinois desires to refuse payment for contracts for service in the city of Chicago, even though he might oppose the extension of the service to the city of Kansas City or Baltimore.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman need not make any reference of that sort. I do not care whether the service is in Chicago or out of Chicago; I think it is a fake in Chicago. If the Government is under contract with these people, they are obliged to pay the money in the end through some source. Now, the cition is whether this provision of the paragraph stating " Now, the questhe Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts" is subject to the point of order. It will be noted that he may enter into contracts for an amount in excess of the amount carried in the appropriation itself. The amount in the appropriation is $1,250,000; the amount of contracts authorized is $1,387,759. I do not know how they arrive at this peculiar sum, but that is the amount they authorized the Postmaster-General to enter into contract for. Now, the original act provided that appropriations might be made under contracts hereafter to be authorized, but the rules of the House provide how the House determines upon the authorization of contracts, and this, where it specifically provides that authority in an appropriation bill, is distinctly, it seems to me, legislation and is subject to the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have the Chair consider the point of order as to the proviso even in the event he shall overrule the point of order as to the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Indiana to concede the point of order as to-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana, I can make no concession, Mr. Chairman. I specifically stated that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED temporarily in the chair).

The Chair finds that this paragraph contains this language:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts, etc., for a period not exceeding ten years—

Extending away beyond, of course, the time for which the appropriations in this bill are to be used. The authority for that is said to be found in permanent legislation contained in the provisions of an appropriation bill approved April, 1902, which, fixing June 30, 1904, as the date for certain purposes,

And thereafter only such contracts shall be made as may, from time to time, be provided for in the annual appropriation act for the postal service.

Now, the best that could be said for that would be that contracts might be appropriated for from year to year in successive appropriation bills. It is doubtful if it contemplated ten-year contracts. But no matter what its construction, the present occupant of the chair does not think that that provision, although a permanent provision in a former appropriation bill, can be held to change the rule of this House that in a general appropriation bill there can be made no change in existing law. The Constitution itself expressly provides that "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." This present House has adopted a positive rule that there shall not be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto "any provision changing existing law." That rule is not controlled by any act of any preceding Congress. Had the act of 1902 itself authorized ten-year contracts to be made such provision might support a subsequent appropriation, but it was not competent for the act of 1902 to authorize or direct this House in 1907 to provide for contracts in an appropriation bill in a way to change existing law. This is clearly an authorization to the Postmaster-General which he does not now possess under existing law, to enter into contracts for a period of ten years. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. As to the entire paragraph? The CHAIRMAN. To the entire paragraph. Part of it being subject to the point, and the point having been aimed at the entire paragraph, it all falls,

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized to offer the following amendment:

After line 13, page 19, insert: "For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $1,250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to say, so far as I am concerned personally, I would be perfectly willing to withdraw the point of order on the entire paragraph if the entire paragraph would go before the House. I am willing to withdraw the point of order on the paragraph, with the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] remaining.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not asked the gentleman to withdraw his point of order. I simply believed in making my point of order to the proviso that the limitation should not be made, changing the existing law and limiting this service to certain named cities.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand, then, that any point of order is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Over-STREET .

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph, and offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, it is to strike out the paragraph which has already gone out on the point of order.

Mr. GOEBEL. The paragraph that has just been adopted as a substitute therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been agreed to. It is not in order to move to strike that out.

Mr. GOEBEL. Then I will offer it as an independent paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers as an independent paragraph the amendment which the Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $1,250,000; and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts not exceeding, in the aggregate, $2,003,000, nnder the provisions of the law, for a period not exceeding ten years: Provided, That said service shall not be extended in any cities other than those in which the service is now authorized by law; And provided further, That the rate per mile for less than 3 miles of double lines of tubes shall not exceed $25,000 per mile, and that the aggregate annual rate of expenditure for this service in the cities of Baltimore, Pittsburg, Kansas City, Cincinnati, and San Francisco, including necessary power and labor to operate the tubes and all other expenses of such service, shall not exceed 8 per cent of the gross postal revenue of the city in which said service is to be installed for the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GOEBEL] want to be heard on it?

Mr. GOEBEL. No.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard

Mr. GOEBEL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For regulation, screen, or other wagon service, $1,275,000.

Mr. FULKERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and, as a part of my remarks, I want to have a document read which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Ful-KERSON] asks for the reading of a document, which will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of St. Joseph, Mo., February 12, 1907. PARCELS POST.

Whereas the St. Joseph Commercial Club recognizes that circumstances in this country in regard to social conditions, length of haul, density of population, lack of monopoly of carriage, improbability of the establishing of a zone system, etc., render an extensive development here of a parcels-carrying system, such as exists in several foreign countries, certain to entail a loss upon the Government of most serious proportions, amounting to many millions of dollars for equipment expenses and further involving an annual operating deficit of enormous proportions:

*F. W. Maxwell. Commissioner.

F. W. MAXWELL, Commissioner. St. Joseph, Mo., February 13, 1907.

Mr. FULKERSON. Mr. Chairman, those Members of the House who have heard the resolutions just read will observe that the first one is in opposition to the numerous bills introduced here known as "parcels-post bills," while the other resolution, the second one read, is in favor of a 1-cent postage rate for first-class mail matter.

I am heartily in favor of the positions taken by our commercial club in both of these resolutions; in fact, I have for several months been talking in opposition to the parcels-post measures, and during that same period have been advocating the reduction of postage to a 1-cent letter rate.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has recommended in the bill which we now have under discussion several new propositions, and while these propositions are doubtless subject to points of order, I hope, for the public good, that no Member here will take advantage of the opportunity thus offered to defeat this legislation. Among the recommendations coming from the committee none is more meritorious than are the items here introduced for increase of the compensation of clerks and carriers; and when I say "carriers" I have reference to carriers both in the rural and city service.

The recommendations of the committee should, in my judgment, be adopted. We can only hope to secure the best of service when the clerk and carrier are receiving fair recom-pense for service rendered. On our rural routes carriers are required to furnish their own horses and wagons and go through all kinds of weather over roads and highways that frequently are all but impassable. Seventy dollars per month for this service, when we take into consideration his outlay in the way of expense for an outfit, is by no means a princely salary. Had the committee's recommendation been in favor of even a greater sum, say, $75 per month, I would still be willing to support the The people are entitled to the best of service and will not, nor should they, be satisfied with anything less. What I have here said about the necessity for increase in pay of rural free-delivery carriers applies with equal force, though in a different way, to city carriers and to clerks in offices and on trains. The rate of wage established for all these classes of employees ten or more years ago is not proper, nor is it sufficient for to-day.

But I am getting away from the subject to which I had arisen to speak, the subject of penny postage.

It has not been many years—we can all remember it—since Congress reduced the rate of postage from 3 to 2 cents on firstclass matter. It was predicted then, as it is now, that we were not ready for the reduction; that the revenues of the Government would not stand it, but the reduction was made, and we have heard no complaint from that day to this on account thereof. And should any Member propose at this date to restore the old 3-cent postage rate, his proposition and his effort would here meet with a frigid reception.

We do not expect and we do not want to make money out of this particular department of the service. In fact, no serious injury would result if we should have a deficiency, if that deficiency were caused solely by this proposed reduction. But this class of mail does not create the deficiency, and if reduced to the 1-cent rate will not then be exclusive cause of deficiencies. These deficiencies are caused by the cost, the great cost to the Government, of sending throughout this country certain items of the second and third classes of mail matter at a cost far below the actual cost of transportation.

Why, let me ask, should the Government carry at a great loss to the people magazines gotten up almost exclusively for advertising purposes, patent-medicine folders, and pamphlets of all kinds, and that class of stuff that is now weighing down the mails to the great injury of the service and creating deficiencies in the postal revenues? Why not let each branch of the business, each class of mail matter, if you please, pay its own way? Would that not be a fair and equitable method? As I understand it, now the first-class matter not only pays its own way, but also furnishes a large portion of the means used to make up the deficiencies in the other classes of mail. There is no good reason why the Government should haul at an actual loss the monthly magazines, advertising pamphlets, catalogues, etc., published and sent forth to boom some private business or enterprise from which service the general public derive no benefits.

All such matter should be sent by express or freight, or not at all. At least the Government should not be compelled to transport it at a loss. Indeed, the country would feel no evil effects therefrom if a large part of this class of matter should never be sent out at all.

It is perfectly evident to all that it is now too late in this Congress to even hope for the passage of a bill reducing postage on letters to 1 cent, but I sincerely hope that the day is not far distant when this matter will be taken up-possibly during the next Congress-and favorably acted upon.

The passage of such a measure would be a small but a substantial benefit, extending to every man, woman, and child in the United States.

I do not care to longer consume the time of the committee.

withdraw my pro forma amendment. [Applause.] Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the Postal Joint Commission created by act of Congress approved June 26, 1906, have just completed a report. Seeking to find a remedy for the ills regarding second-class mail matter, this learned Commission, consisting of three Senators and three Members of the House of Representatives, have drafted a bill which would create a press censorship, putting it in the hands of Government employees to determine what information the reading public wants, and extending a paternalistic guardianship over the countingroom by limiting the amount of advertising, and specifying just how it shall be printed in the pages of daily newspapers.

This extraordinary measure might well be termed "a bill to reduce the standard of daily newspapers." The Joint Commission started work on the hypothesis that second-class mail matter is carried at a loss to the Government, and does not pay its proportionate share in revenue.

In their report these Commissioners say:

The advocates of that reduction argue that the volume of business naturally resulting therefrom would offset the temporary loss in revenue. They insist also that the charge for the first-class matter is out of all proportion to the cost of its handling and transportation.

The same spirit that inspired the anticartoon agitation of Pennypacker fame, in Pennsylvania, and that more recently found expression in the gag-law project of the New York State senate, at Albany, animates this class of "reformers." To them the prospective revision of the postal laws from a revenue basis is secondary to the excuse they find in striking a blow at the newspapers.

The plea put forward as justification for the action of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General is that there is annually a deficit in the Postal Department. His apologists would have the people believe the shortage is attributable to the fact that the Government is carrying the periodicals and newspaper publications at the present small rate—a privilege which the publishers are daily abusing. Nor is this all. In this connection

If the present postal laws are to remain, there should be a universal enforcement of them to the limit of the administration. If you will give me five or six hundred men and turn me loose and not tie my hands, I will reduce the deficit, but I think it is better to have a statute to do it.

In his first annual message to Congress, George Washington, in referring to the public press, said:

But here I can not forbear to recommend a repeal of the tax on the transportation of public prints. There is no resource so firm for the Government of the United States as the affections of the people, guided by an enlightened policy; and to this primary good nothing can conduce more than a faithful representation of public proceedings diffused, without restraint, throughout the United States.

Mr. Chairman, there was one Department of the Government which the founders of this Republic never expected to be selfsustaining from a money standpoint, and that is the Post-Office Department. It is always desirable that the best possible mail facilities and conveniences, regardless of pecuniary outlay, shall reach all classes of the people. The newspaper is the greatest medium on earth for imparting knowledge to the sons and daughters of men—the most potent instrumentality for dispensing general intelligence. While avenues, like the rural free delivery routes, through which education goes to the masses, are being daily multiplied at tremendous cost to the United States, I regret to find that a narrow, carping, and tyrannical disposition is manifested in some quarters to curtail newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals in the use of mail facilities under the pretext of saving money in the matter of the transportation of second-class matter. For this alleged reason, radical reforms are urged in the postal service which, if they once assume the form of law, will compel a complete overturning of the newspaper busines

The measure proposed is nothing short of an officious and arbitrary attempt to regulate newspaper enterprises. changes therein suggested are, apparently, aimed to harass and burden the newspapers of the country; and if the bill should become a law, it will materially arrest newspaper progress and development, because the amazing theory upon which the Commission has proceeded in reaching a recommendation to have Congress, by legislation, put peculiarly drastic restrictions upon the transportation of second-class mail matter seems to be that newspaper improvement and expansion are reprehensible and should be curbed by statute; the inevitable result of which would be to lessen the field of the typesetters' work.

The main contention of the Postal Commission's report appears to be that the press of the United States is furnishing to their customers—the reading public—more matter than is necessary or proper, and the bill frankly proposes to restrain this tendency of the newspapers to be liberal with their readers. The report declares:

The newspaper is rapidly being extended into the magazine field. The miscellaneous matter contained in the Sunday issue of a newspaper must of necessity lack the quality to make it socially and educationally valuable.

If a Congressional commission can regulate or forbid fiction or literary matter in a newspaper, the power stretches out also to criticism, pictures, cartoons, and the free expression of opin-

I have been taught to believe that a free, untrammeled press, newspaper and periodical, most widely circulated, constituted the best guaranty of the intelligence indispensable to a self-governing people; and to this end the advantages of cheap postal rates have heretofore been designedly accorded. I do not concur in the radical change of a policy so beneficent to that suggested by the postal commission's report and proposed logical time. It is clear that the postal change so recommended legislation. It is clear that the postal changes so recommended and urged, while limiting the liberties of the individual, will also destroy for many workingmen an opportunity to pursue their calling in the type cases of the composing room.

One of the provisions of the contemplated bill, which has attracted wide attention, will necessitate a revolution in publica-tion methods. It declares that no supplement of a newspaper which is admitted to second-class rates shall "be composed of or contain advertisements." Furthermore, it is decreed that no newspaper or periodical shall be admitted to the mails at second-class rates if advertisements constitute more than 50 per cent of the superficial area of any issue.

An issue of a newspaper or other periodical may be composed of parts or sections, but all such parts or sections shall be made of the same size, form, and weight of paper, and, when taken together, shall form one complete and identified whole.

It requires only a casual glance at the above provisions of the bill to fully convince anyone of the radical nature of the remedy It would limit the amount of advertising. It would eliminate all legitimate advertising matter from supplements, and it would prevent the publication in the supplements of all fiction, of all matter of general and useful information regarding the affairs of the world, and would make it merely an overflow for the news of the main sheet.

The Mobile Register, one of the most influential dailies published in Alabama, in a leading editorial under the head of "Proposed postal reform," so clearly voices my objections to the legislation recommended by the Commission that I ask the Clerk to read the same, in order that I may incorporate it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

the Record as a part of my remarks.

Objection must be made to the clause that supplements shall not be printed on paper differing from that used in the main body of the publication. It often happens that supplements are illustrated with half-tone pictures and that a heavier body paper is required in order that such picture may be suitably printed. It would be a hardship upon legitimate publication to insist upon the use of uniform body of paper for the whole publication. Another objectionable feature of the report is that which says that all parts or sections of a newspaper shall be made of the same size, form, and weight of paper and shall, taken together, form one complete and identifiable whole. Here it appears that no latitude is allowed the publisher, who, himself, may not be able to tell in advance of the hour of publication just how many forms he will print or what relation the last forms printed shall have to the first forms. To bind him by the hard and fast rule that all sections shall be alike in size, form, and weight of paper will be to embarrass him very greatly. Also in regard to this further provision: "All provisions of law applicable to newspaper or periodical shall apply equally to each and every section thereof." See, for example, that part of the law that says that advertisements shall not constitute more than 50 per cent of the superficial area of any issue of the publication. If that provision is to apply to each section, the same as to the whole issue, then it would not be proper to devote more than 50 per cent of the space of any section to advertisements, even when other sections might contain less than that quantum of advertisements. Yet another burden would be imposed by the rule that supplements must contain matter germane to what is contained in the regular issue and supplied in order to complete the matter left incomplete in the main body of the publication. This seems to regard a supplement as merely a runover section, and not, as it really is, an added portion of the paper, devo the supplement.

A most important provision is that which limits the advertisements to 50 per cent of the space. This is arbitrary and should not be made a part of the law. Publishers do not consider it good policy to devote more than 40 per cent of their space to advertisements, but there are occasions when they are forced by the demand of their customers to exceed that space. In the holidays it often happens. The rule ought to be that not more than 50 per cent average shall be devoted to advertisements. Especially would the rule proposed by the Commission work to the disadvantage of country weeklies, whose rates are small, and they must fill a good part of their space with advertisements or go out of business. They should be exempted altogether from this provision.

Thus we perceive that the Commission, in their self-inflated.

Thus we perceive that the Commission, in their self-inflated wisdom, have undertaken to tell the country exactly what sort of an enterprise or institution a newspaper should be, and in accord with these views they would have the Government adopt a policy of paternalism more pronounced than was ever dreamed of in the fervid brain of the rankest advocate of that doctrine the wide world over. It is true that the Commission advise that the arbitrary power of refusing the second-class rate to a publisher be denied the Postmaster-General and that an appeals commission be provided, so that if the rate is refused by the Postmaster-General the publisher's cause may be heard and adjudicated; also that no publication can be suspended, revoked, or annulled—that is to say, can be deprived of the second-class rating after having been given it unless first the proposed order is reviewed by the appeals commission and found

An elaborate plan is provided for this commission to be known as the "commission of postal appeals" under the provisions of the proposed bill. This commission is to have control, in a general way, of the classification of mail matter as well as the right of matter to be admitted to the second class. It is to consist of three members, to be appointed by the President, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate, and to hold office for six years.

This scheme is somewhat in harmony with the provisions of a bill introduced in the House at this session by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], entitled "An act to provide for a judicial review of orders excluding persons from the use of United States mail facilities." It gave me pleasure to vote for that measure when it passed the House. It was a move in the right direction. I am opposed to bureaucracy, and I heartindorse the denunciations which the author of that bill fulminated against the clandestine, ex parte, unilateral, star-chamber methods conducted by "secret emissaries of the law," by bureau hirelings. He said both forcefully and eloquently:

by bureau hirelings. He said both forcefully and eloquently:

I have no sympathy with or respect for the policy that affects the important rights of person, reputation, or property by means of confidential reports of secret emissaries of the law. Reports containing evidence respecting the rights of the citizen should always be made public. No consideration of delicacy or embarrassment should justify the Government in blasting the reputation and ruining the business of a citizen without giving him an opportunity to know exactly who has testified against him and to what he has testified. The reports of inspectors under any practice should be open to the person who may be affected by the fraud order. He should be allowed to know who have given information or testified against him, and citizens who are interviewed should understand that their names and statements would be open to inspection by the person against whom they testify or give information. This would have a most wholesome and salutary influence. Men would see that the statements that were written up by the post-office inspectors and credited to them were fair and just and absolutely true. There should be no inducement or opportunity for them to attempt to stab the business or reputation of rivals in the dark.

Even under the present law the investigation of fraud-order questions should be conducted in as open a manner as possible. Star-chamber procedure has no place in the administration of rights in this Government. It is contrary to the spirit of the age. The whole fraud-order practice in the Post-Office Department, however honest and pure the intentions and purposes of its administrators may be, is out of harmony with the principles of individual liberty, and it ought to be discontinued. There is no adequate excuse for it.

But in the case of exclusion of newspapers and periodicals from the mails, the publisher should be content with nothing less than a trial by jury, and not a trial by commission. "Cold, rigid justice," the "one weight and the one measure," every American citizen is entitled to receive.

It is well, ever and anon, to sound the danger signal.

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

In all monarchies there is more or less restriction and control of individual and private business affairs at the instance of the Crown.

In the colonies representatives of King George carried on certain kinds and classes of profitable monopolies in which ordinary citizens were not allowed to compete, levying unequal tribute upon them, to such an unjust extent that the American Revolution was precipitated. Congress, I submit, can not rightfully delegate the anthority belonging to it and with which it is charged by the Constitution for the transaction of governmental business to executive boards, departmental bureaus, or deputized commissions robed with in-quisitorial powers, while sitting in judgment upon the rights, interests, and lawful pursuits of private citizens, whether of high or low degree.

Trial by jury, the enjoyment of the suffrage franchise, free speech, an untrammeled press, and freedom of everyday business transactions from Executive interference and censorship ness transactions from Executive interference and censorship constitute our boasted liberty in this "land of the brave and home of the free." Our forefathers fought to obtain these priceless blessings and privileges, which are now, I trust, securely guaranteed to us in the organic law. But we can not close our eyes to the distressing fact that there is a socialistic movement on foot in this Union of "our fathers and sires" which would clothe bureaucracy, and, for that matter, all the protean systems of executive control, with the very power we wrested from the King of England more than a century ago.

The framers of the Federal Constitution divided the adminis-

The framers of the Federal Constitution divided the administration of the Government, its legitimate powers, into three different departments, to wit, legislative, judicial, and executive, and in order that the Government, while performing all its duties and carrying out all its functions, might interfere as little as possible with the lawful pursuits of its people, it became vitally essential, and still remains vitally essential, that these several departments shall be kept separate and distinct.

Professor Burgess in his book on Political Economy asserts:

The sovereignty back of the Government in the United States vests the power in the courts to interpret the prescripts of the Constitution in behalf of individual rights and immunities and to defend the same against the arbitrary acts of the legislature or Executive.

It is manifestly the duty of Congress to see to it that every coordinate but separate Executive Department of the Government is so hedged about and fenced in by law as not to allow in anywise or manner the vested rights of American citizen-ship to be imperiled, impaired, or destroyed. Having this salutary object in view, I had the honor to introduce into this Chamber on the 25th day of January, 1907, the following bill:

following bill:

A bill to prevent the exclusion of a newspaper or periodical from the United States mails as second-class matter, after having been entered to such privilege, without due process of law.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for any official connected with the Post-Office Department to exclude any newspaper or periodical from the mails of the United States as second-class matter, after having been once admitted to such privilege, without due process of law first had and obtained in the United States court of the district where the publisher of such newspaper or periodical resides, such privilege having become thereby a vested right, of which such publisher shall not be deprived except for good and sufficient cause, judicially ascertained in the mode and manner provided by the law of the land.

Mr. Chairman in advocating the enactment of a law like the

Mr. Chairman, in advocating the enactment of a law like the one now under discussion, I am not "playing to the grand stand." I am not trying to display any pyrotechnics. I have no personal interest in the publication of any newspaper or periodical; but I am firmly convinced that having been once periodical; but I am firmly convinced that having been once entered as second-class matter they ought not to be excluded from the mails except for just cause, judicially ascertained, after legal notice to the publisher and under due process of law. Under existing statutes the publisher is entirely helpless against such arbitrary action. There may be inserted in his paper, without his knowledge or consent, some local or business notice-say, for instance, of a raffle or drawing-and this, coming to the knowledge of the postmaster or his agent, may cause the whole mail edition to be held up, which means its destruction, such action being tantamount to a punishment without trial and wholly unsuited to the offense, either charged or committed.

The Daphne (Ala.) Standard, discussing this subject, employs this clear ringing language:

this clear ringing language:

The United States Constitution guarantees to every American citizen the right of trial by jury. It guarantees him against unlawful seizure, detention, or delay. It guarantees that he shall be brought face to face with his accusers, and that he shall, in fact, have given to him every opportunity allowed to any other citizen to defend himself and his business against encroachments or assaults. In short, he can not be convicted before he has been tried. In the case of the Postal Department and the publishers it is not so; since the Third Assistant Postmaster-General has arbitrarily and of his own volition denied to certain publishers the right to circulate through the United States mails their publications, and solely upon his construction of some of the postal laws and the rules and regulations of the Postal Department. Not only this, but he now declares it to be his opinion that a strict construction of the law would result in 60 to 70 per cent of all publications being denied the right of the mails.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail locks and keys, chains, tools, and machinery, and labor and material necessary for repairing same, and incidental expenses pertaining thereto, $45,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Line 10, page 20, after the word "for," insert the words "manufacturing and."

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 10, page 20, after the word "for," add the words "manufacturing and."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Of course I desire to explain the amendment. In the city of Washington we have a mail-lock and mail-bag repair shop. A provision is made upon the subject on this page of the bill for merging these two enterprises in one building, and also to provide for a warehouse for the supplies department. Inasmuch as we are gathering in that one building the manufacturing of the mail locks and mail bags, we ought to add manufacturing as well as repairing, for the reason that there is a limited amount of manufacturing of these mail bags conducted to-day in that establish-The general contract for mail-bag construction is provided for in another appropriation; but inasmuch as the force for the repairs for the mail bags must be retained, and they will have time upon certain occasions to manufacture as well as repair, we thought it advisable to include that in the provision.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, does the Government now manufacture all its mail locks and keys, chains, tools, and

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It does in connection with the repairs. For example, in repairing these mail bags, the Government is required to keep on hand mail locks and keys, chains, tools, and machinery with which to make the repairs. Having, therefore, the material which enters into the repair of the bags, they can use the same force, when that force is not occupied in repair work, in the actual manufacture of the bags themselves; but that is only to a very limited degree.

Mr. MANN. What I wanted to ask the gentleman was whether this involved any change of policy on the part of the

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, none whatever.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether or not I would be in favor of it. However, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The amount of appropriation is just as it has been for many years.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment,

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of suitable buildings for the use of the Post-Office Department, including the mail-bag repair shop, lock repair shop, and the division of supplies, $32,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General is authorized in his discretion to enter into a contract for the rent of suitable buildings in the vicinity of the railroad tracks for the use of the Post-Office Department for the period of ten years.

Mr. MURPHY. I reserve the point of order on the proviso. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what it is intended very glad to explain the item. In the bill providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial service there has been carried each year for several years an item appropriating, as I now remember it, twelve or fourteen thousand dollars for rent of buildings in the city of Washington in connection with the postal service. At the same time there has been carried in the postoffice appropriation bill an item of $14,000 to cover rent for the mail-bag repair shop, to which I have just made allusion. there have been appropriations for the service of carting the materials and supplies of the Department from the various sup-ply depots in the city to the Department and to the stations for shipment out of the city. The Department found upon an investigation that a decided economy could be accomplished by gathering these different provisions into one item, and in connection with the growth of the supply division of the Government they thought it advisable to have a warehouse in which to house these supplies, rather than have them scattered throughout the city. Therefore they recommend, and the committee followed that recommendation, that we drop out of the legislative bill the $14,000 item and drop out of this bill the additional item of $14,000, and these other items for rent to which I have referred, and they have all been dropped out, and authorize one contract which will enable the Government to have a supply division properly housed and at the same time provide sufficient room for the mail-bag repair shop.

These several changes, Mr. Chairman, have resulted in securing much better facilities, where they can have much better accommodation for the employees of the mail-bag repair shop and much larger capacity for the supply department, and at the same time entail a less charge upon the Government than the várious individual items. That, of course, can only be done by getting a general arrangement for a long-time contract between the Department and the owners of the property. I want to state for the information of the committee that this particular authority will result in having the mail-bag repair shop and the supply warehouse adjacent to the railroad tracks, which will avoid the expense not only of drayage and cartage, but the danger entailed damage to the supplies themselves. Therefore, in just a word, this provision has resulted in the elimination of several individual items of appropriation and their segregation into one, which will result in less cost to the Government for much better facilities. Now I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. Is it not true that the Government will obtain suitable buildings for the purpose, lighted and ventilated?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Exactly so, for the benefit of the laborers in the mail-bag repair shop. The conditions of the laborers in the mail-bag repair shop. which have prevailed for some time in the mail-bag repair shop are very unsatisfactory.

Mr. MURPHY. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address a few remarks on the post-office appropriation bill, which the committee is now considering.

The chairman, in his opening remarks on this bill, made a statement in reference to it, which was clear and well defined, as his statements always are. However, there are some amendments which I think ought to be made to this bill. In the first place, I think the annual gross receipts of first-class offices, on pages 5 and 6, should have "fifty thousand" stricken out and "forty thousand" inserted instead. This will allow offices whose annual gross receipts are not less than $40,000 the advantage of one additional grade for clerks and also one additional grade for carriers. What I mean is that the clerks can be promoted successively to the fifth grade instead of the fourth This will allow clerks in first-class offices to be promoted to the fifth grade, at a salary of $1,000, and carriers to be promoted to the fifth grade, whose salaries shall be $1,000. would seem to me that this would be nothing more than what is fair, for the reason that the Post-Office Department have seen fit, in their wisdom, to change grades from second-class to firstclass offices when their annual receipts are $40,000, and this is my reason for asking for this amendment. The chairman of the committee gave as a reason why this should not be done that there were some first-class offices whose receipts are $40,000 in towns where the population does not exceed 1,500. I have made some investigation to find a town of this size in which the receipts are sufficient to entitle them to the grade of a firstclass office, and so far I have been unable to find it, although I have no right to doubt the statement of the chairman of the committee in regard to it.

The chairman of the committee further states that in making appropriation for each of the Departments, like the great Post-Office Department, that you can not always help from working a Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I shall be hardship on some, and that this bill must necessarily be framed with a broad, fair, liberal view. It would seem to me that this is one of the very best reasons why my amendment should go into this bill. He gives as his reason why it should not go into the bill that there are some few cases, like this which I stated a moment ago, where he gives the same unusual construction with the Post-Office Department, from some particular factory, who use the mails extensively, and that, while the inhabitants of the town were not over 1,500, yet they would be entitled to a first class of the same unusual construction with first-class office. Now, if my amendment is adopted, I will agree with the gentleman, it might work a hardship in cases like these, but in a general way it would be fair and just.

In order that no advantage of this amendment might be taken in particular cases like the one he mentions, it might be well to state that a post-office whose annual gross receipts are $40,000 and over should be entitled to fifth grade as clerks and fifth grade as carriers when the population of the town is not less than 10,000. This would obviate the objection which the chairman of the committee urges against the amendment.

The committee in this bill have made several increases in compensation for the employees, and deservedly so, and I am only sorry that in their wisdom they did not feel that they could make greater increases than they have made. Take for example the railway mail clerks: I feel that they are the most poorly paid employees of the Government to-day with perhaps one exception, and that exception is the rural free-delivery carrier. The work of the railway mail clerk is hard, difficult to perform, and requires close application. This is not only laborious physically but mentally as well, and in addition to this, his work is even more dangerous than that of the engineers who are in charge of the train, for in cases of wrecks he is rarely ever apprised of what is about to happen until it is too late, and it is for this reason, in my judgment, that more liberal compensation should be allowed for this class of work.

The committee has recommended an increase of $120 for the rural free-delivery carriers. This, in my opinion, is one of the most deserved increases in this entire bill. This will make the maximum rate, if this bill is passed as recommended by the committee, of rural free-delivery routes of 24 miles, $840. This rate is graded at a reduction of $18 per mile per annum, if the routes are a less distance. In my emile per language is the per mile per annum, if the routes are a less distance. In my opinion this latter clause should not apply. Where routes are given for a shorter distance than 24 miles, it is usually through a densely populated district, and these conditions should entitle them to the same pay. I feel that no rural free-delivery carrier should receive less than $840 where he has to furnish two horses and a wagon and do the work necessary to be done. It was suggested by some one that it required no more labor to deliver mail on a route that is thickly populated than one which is sparsely settled. This, I am sure, is an error or a lack of the proper conception of conditions existing under such or similar cases.

I give as an illustration the condition existing in my own city, which I think is a fair sample of the majority of cases. The city carriers do not supply the routes outside the corporate limits. This is a part of the duty of the rural free-delivery carrier. On a great many routes, from 2 to 3 miles outside of the towns, the houses are almost as thickly settled as they are in a great many towns. In the distance of a mile the mail carrier will be required to stop, take mail out, and put mail in boxes, say, fifty times, when on ordinary country roads it would not be necessary for him to stop for this purpose more than, say, a half dozen times; and it would seem to me that some allowance should be made for shorter routes where this condition exists. Take routes in the South which run through farming country, where a great majority of the population is such that they do not get much mail—in fact, receive scarcely any—it would only be necessary for the carrier to stop at, say, one out of ten of the houses; and thus, you see, it would hardly require more than one stop in a mile.

Now, speaking from a personal experience, we have a route running out from a substation at the Hunting post-office, W. Va., and just beyond the corporate limits of the town there is what is known as "Harveytown." The houses in this particular locality are as close together as they are in the town proper, and the carrier has to make, necessarily, fifty stops in the distance of a half mile. I think in cases of this kind there should be a provision allowing the Post-Office Department to allow extra compensation in these thickly popular lated localities. It was my understanding that this was done until the chairman of the committee made the statement a few days ago that this was not the case. Now, I think a paragraph should be inserted in this bill to cover just such cases as the one I have called the attention of the committee to.

For inland transportation by railroad routes, $44,660,000.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order against this paragraph, except the first two lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The first two lines are all that have been

Mr. MURDOCK. I offer the following amendment to the lines which have been read.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves a point of order against what?

Mr. MANN. I understood that the gentleman was seeking to amend the paragraph commencing with line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered an amendment to the paragraph included in lines 1 and 2 on page 21.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. My understanding is that those lines only—lines 1 and 2—had been read.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. MURDOCK. I offer the amendment to those two lines.

Mr. LLOYD. I ask unanimous consent to refer back to the paragraph covering the pneumatic-tube service, in order that we may consider that section.

Mr. MURDOCK. I object at this time, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. LLOYD. It will only take a minute. The gentleman from Kentucky who made the point of order a few minutes ago and the gentleman from Illinois-

Mr. MANN. I have made no promise about it.
Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MURDOCK. Will my amendment be pending when we return to these two lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not pending except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then I object. The CHAIRMAN. The gentlem The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "dollars," in line 2, page 21: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in payment for transportation of the malls by railroad routes where the average weight of mails per day has been computed by the use of a divisor less than the whole number of days such mails have been weighed."

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. . Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. My understanding is that the point of order is reserved on the paragraph itself. How does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. In order that gentlemen may have the right—
The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair answer the first parliamentary inquiry? The gentleman from Illinois reserved a point of The Chair understood the gentleman to say that he reserved it on the amendment offered by the gentleman from

Mr. MANN. No; on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet finished his state-ent. If the point of order had been reserved on the paragraph, the Chair would not have recognized the gentleman from Kansas to offer an amendment.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, have I the floor? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has The gentleman from Kansas has the floor on the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the amendment that I have offered is clearly in order. It touches the appropriation itself—the dollars appropriated. It is a limitation. It in no wise provides for a greater expenditure of money. It provides for a limitation—a lesser sum of money. It does not change existing law. Those are the three principal propositions which, I think, support the amendment and protect it from a point of order.

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield

Mr. MURDOCK. If the Chair has heard sufficiently from me on the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can hardly indicate that he has been convinced as yet. [Laughter.] Does the gentleman desire to proceed?

Mr. MURDOCK. I will proceed, then, if I have not convinced the chairman. [Laughter.] I should like to know on what point the chairman is in doubt?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt as to whether this is not a change of existing law.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will seek to prove that it is not.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.
Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, the original statute upon which this provision found at the top of page 21, lines 1 and 2, is based is found in section 4002 of the Revised Statutes, and

The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the condition that at the rates hereafter mentioned;

First. That the mails shall be conveyed with due frequency and speed; and that sufficient and suitable rooms, fixtures, and furniture in a car or apartment properly lighted and warmed shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rate, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $125, etc.

The rates are recited progressively, being progressively reduced rates. I submit that the pay is per annum, and that the pay is on a basis of the average weight of mail per day. Further along it is provided in section 4002 that—

The average weight is to be ascertained in every case by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from the very beginning, from the first passage of that law, there was doubt about the construction of the statute in the Department, and finally, in 1884, one Postmaster-General, having forbidden the practice and his successor desiring to reestablish the old practice which had prevailed for eleven years, submitted it to the office of the Attorney-General. Some one in the Attorney-General's office-it is not plain who, because the ruling appears in different publications signed by different men-gave a six-line opinion. He was not troubled with points of order at that time; but he gave the opinion which reestablished that practice. So that there is doubt in the Department, and has been, as to the construction of that word "working." I believe that this language is not subject to a point of order, because I believe that the legislative branch has a right to put upon the law any construction it sees fit.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentle-Mr. PAYNE. man from Kansas a question.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will yield.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask him if the Department has not construed it during the whole existence of the law in the manner indicated by the Attorney-General's opinion?

Mr. MURDOCK. With the exception of the time that Mr.

Gresham was Postmaster-General and his order was in force.

Mr. PAYNE. That order called forth this opinion the gentleman refers to. Now, I want to ask, further, if the courts have not held in a number of cases that where a doubtful law had been construed by an Executive Department or by the legislative branch of the Government in one way and in one direction -the courts have not followed that confor a period of yearsstruction of the law?

Well, the gentleman from New York is a Mr. MURDOCK. lawyer and I am not. I want to say, however, to the gentleman and to the Chairman, in regard to this word "working," that working is not synonymous with week day either in the law or in the transportation of the mail. Ninety per cent of the mail weights go on routes of the United States that have Sunday service. Work is performed on Sunday. Sunday is a working day in the mail service, and to contend otherwise is to say that Members of Congress are willing to stand here and say that we are as helpless as babes so far as the violation of the Sabbath is concerned, but we are good and holy in keeping the Sundays out of the arithmetical computation for the payment

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kan-

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he does not contend that his amendment properly construed is a limitation on the appropriation independent of the question whether or not the law is as he contends for?

Mr. MURDOCK. I did not quite catch the gentleman's ques-

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman contend that his amendment is by way of limitation strictly on the appropriation without reference to the fact that the law is as he contends for?

Mr. MURDOCK. I certainly do. I contend that this is a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. FINLEY. That is my understanding.

Mr. MURDOCK. I contend that the working day is not a workday. Workday might be a week day. As long as there is work performed on Sunday and 90 per cent of the weight goes on the lines which have service on Sunday, then Sunday is a working

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas, if this amendment is adopted, would it in any wise change the method of weighing or computing the amount of mail carried by railway?

Mr. MURDOCK. It would not change the manner of weighing at all.

Mr. Chairman, this may be the final word to-day, so far as I am concerned, on this subject, and I desire to say before conclusion that this thing has not been mentioned, the construction of this working day, for thirty-three years, either on the floor of Congress, so far as I can find, or in any of the reports of the Postmasters-General or in any of the hearings of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads or in any of the reports of the four commissions which have gone into this subject. man of this Committee of the Whole House, when he rules, will be the first man to pass upon its construction since 1884, and the identity of the individual who passed upon it then is not now known

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a moment upon the point of order. If the Chair will turn to page 21 of the bill he will readily see that this amendment is a substitute, one might say, for that clause of the bill beginning or line 16, page 21, and is introduced in order to effect the same purpose. In the general discussion over this bill it has been admitted here freely in the House by everyone familiar with the bill that it was subject to the point of order, and the gentleman is trying to effect by this amendment what has heretofore failed and been admitted to be subject to a point of order—the paragraph beginning with line 16. The facts about this are simply these: The manner and method of ascertaining the average daily weight and the compensation therefor is fixed by law. This clause has received the interpretation of the Attorney-General and of the Post-Office Department, and this method of ascertaining the compensation, under the opinion of the Attorney-General and the regulation of the Department, has been in force for a great many years. I desire to call the Chairman's attention to these decisions, found on page 352 of the Constitution, Manual, and Digest, where it has been held that:

The language of limitation prescribing the conditions under which the appropriation may be used may not be such as, when fairly con-strued, would change existing law.

There are numerous decisions to that effect. Again-Legislation may not be proposed under the form of a limitation.

This, in effect, is the changing of existing law under the form of a limitation, and nothing else, seeking in this way to over-turn the discretion and the judgment and the decisions of the Attorney-General and the Post-Office Department followed for

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard a moment on the point of order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock], in my judgment, is nothing more or less than a limitation upon this particular appropriation, made for the purpose of inland transportation of mail by railroad routes. It has been held time after time that wherever an amendment only sought to limit the use of the appropriation that was then being considered, it was in order, and hence not subject to the point of order. I remember about a year ago, when an appropriation bill was before the House making appropriation for the pay of custom-house officers, there was an amendment then offered providing that no part of the funds therein appropriated should be paid to customs officials in excess of the receipts of the customs office that they represented. The Chairman, Mr. Sherman, who I think was in the chair at that time, held that the amendment was a limitation upon that particular appropriation, and overruled the point of order. When another appropriation bill was before the House the committee brought in a provision providing that the janitors of the various committee rooms should be subject to the authority of the Doorkeeper of the House after the adjournment of Congress, which went out of the bill on a point of order, it being new legislation. The amendment was immediately offered providing that no part of the funds then appropriated should be paid to any of the janitors of the various committee rooms unless they obeyed the directions of the Doorkeeper. The Chair held—I believe it was the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted]—that that amendment was a limitation upon the appropriation carried in that bill, and hence was not subject to the point of order, and therefore overruled the point of order that was made against it. I remember one other precedent in which there was an appropriation made for the payment to American-bottomed vessels for carrying coal to the Philippines, to which an amendment was offered limiting the appropriation to the effect that no part of the sum appropriated should be paid where the American bottoms charged in excess of the rate charged by foreign bottoms.

The amendment was held to be a limitation upon the appropriation, and the point of order made against it was overruled by another distinguished Chairman of this House.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, whether or not the law is as contended for by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] or whether the law is as it is to-day and for years has been construed by the Post-Office Department, I think is immaterial to the settlement of this question. If the amendment of the gen-tleman from Kansas is a limitation on the first two lines of the bill, page 21, "for inland transportation by railroad routes, $44,660,000," then it makes no difference whether the law is one way or the other. I submit that, according to the decisions heretofore given in the House, this is, strictly speaking, a limitation, and if a limitation, then the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas is in order and no point of order can be sustained against it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Stating a hypothetical case, and that is this: Suppose the next appropriation bill should appropriate $44,000,000 for the carrying of mails by the railway companies without any additional language. Now, what law would govern the Department in the payment of that sum to the rail-

Mr. FINLEY. I think I can answer the gentleman. I will say this, that if the law is as contended by the gentleman from Illinois, and as to-day practiced in the Department, then the railroad companies would not be compelled to accept the compensation provided here and under the limitations of the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas, but they could go to the Court of Claims and recover there. I think that answers the gentleman, and it would be the same way if the appropriation was in the language stated by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I asked the question with a view of bringing out the opinion of the gentleman from South Carolina upon the point as to whether this provision contained new legislation or was a change of law or not. My own idea of it is that it is no change of law, that if it is put on this bill it merely attaches to the appropriation carried in this bill, and that in the next appropriation bill if there was a simple appropriation of $40,000,000 to the railroads for carrying the mails it would be paid out under the law as it has been paid out heretofore since 1873, I think it was, or about that date, when the rule was adopted. In other words, this provision put in this bill will not change existing law and a plain appropriation made hereafter will be governed by the same rule or law as heretofore.

Mr. FINLEY. That is admitting the practice at the present time and past to be the correct law.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Well, it will be the correct law if there is nothing done by Congress to change the practice of the Department under the law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is contended that this amendment is a change of existing law. What law does it change? What law now directs that mails shall be weighed for a particular number of days and then that there shall be a divisor of a lesser number called working days.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that to be the existing law; understands that is conceded.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And that working days in the law are to be construed as week days, is that the understand-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no opinion to give now as to that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If it is contended that working days are week days, I must take issue with gentlemen who support that proposition, for the reason that working days in the carrying of railway mails includes the Sabbath day-includes every day in the week. It includes Monday, it includes Sunday; every day of the week, therefore, is a working day. At the time this law was enacted working days may have meant six days in the week. It may have meant three days in the week. It may have meant one day in the week, so far as carrying mail is concerned. Mails were carried for one day in the week; they were carried triweekly, and they were carried every day in the week; but now, as has been stated here, mails are carried seven days in the week upon 90 per cent of the roads of the country carrying the mails. I contend, therefore, this is not a change of existing law, but a change of administrative methods that are practiced without authority of law. We would have authority in an appropriation bill, I think, to prescribe that wages should be paid weekly or every two weeks, where the practice had been to pay monthly, without direction or authority of law. This amendment directs that this money shall be paid out when the mails have been weighed and computed in a particular manner, there being no positive law to the contrary. We are not, therefore, changing existing law, but providing a limitation upon the conditions under which the money here appropriated shall be paid out.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question, Mr. Chairman. Suppose that the law is, as it has been the practice of the Department, that they weigh for a hundred and five days and make the divisor ninety

Now, suppose that is the law and the next appropriation bill simply appropriates $44,000 for the carrying of the mail by the railroad companies, without any additional provision as to how it shall be paid out or the method of computing the amount of mail carried by the railways, what rule will govern even with this provision put in this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This amendment provides that if it is to be weighed for one hundred and five days the divisor shall be one hundred and five days.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is as to this appropriation. Does it reach any appropriation that may hereafter be made?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly not. That is simply a limitation upon this appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is my view of it.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am fully convinced that the amendment is merely a limitation which in no way offends existing law, and directs a change of an administrative method which has been exercised without positive authority of law.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I presume I can not add much of knowledge to the question under discussion. It seems to me that the point of order invoked against this amendment, which is simply one of limitation, should not prevail. I am informed that the present law, if such it is, has had no judicial construction—at least there has been no decision of a court. I am further informed that under the existing statute the Attorney-General has prescribed a rule of conduct. Now, by the pending amendment Congress seeks to determine the method of the disbursement of the present appropriation, and it does seem to me that the Congress has the right to consider any previous legislation that has not had a judicial determination and give it Congressional construction. If the main point involved is the meaning of the words "working days," contained in the present law, I apprehend that the Congress has the right to express its construction thereof in the manner contemplated by this amendment, which is in the nature of a limitation upon the disbursements of its funds. If there has been a judicial determination of this law, then I am free to confess the point of order would lie against this proposed amendment; but there having been none I can not see that a point of order will lie against the Congress attempting to construe one of its previous laws, and especially where the meaning of that law is in doubt, as seems to be the case here.

The CHAIRMAN. The existing law has received a construction by the officers charged with the duty of administering it, and that construction the Chair feels bound to follow. The proposed amendment changes existing law as construed by the proper officer, by changing the divisor. This is in the guise of a limitation; but it has been held over and over again here that a limitation is negative in its nature and may not include positive enactment establishing rules for executive officers. been held further that while limitation may provide that a part of an appropriation shall not be used except in a certain way, yet the restriction of executive discretion may not go to the extent of an imposition of new duties. And the limitation on the discretion exercised under the law by a bureau of the Government is a change of existing law. The decisions on the question of limitation, the attempt to draw a well-defined distinction between changes of existing law and a proper limitation, are among the most difficult questions that the Chair is ever called upon to decide. In a decision rendered last year by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sherman] on a matter very similar to this, he said:

Where a proposed limitation might be construed by the executive or administering officer as a modification of a statute and change of existing law, it could not be held a limitation.

The Chair's belief is that the rulings along that line are correct, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Mur-DOCK | appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the

The question was put.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 14.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murpock | offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

After dollars, in line 2, page 21:
"Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in payment for transportation of the mails by railroad routes where the average weight of mails per day has been computed by the use of a divisor less than the whole number of working days such mails have been weighed; and "Provided further, That the words 'working days' shall be construed to mean days upon which work in the transportation of the mails by railroad routes is performed."

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The same point of order exactly lies on that as on the previous amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and in my time I would like to have certain communications read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE COMMERCIAL CLUB OF OMAHA, Omaha, February 13, 1907.

Hon. J. L. Kennedy, M. C., House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIE: At a meeting of the executive committee, held the 12th instant, the following resolutions pertaining to the appropriation for carrying mail were unanimously adopted, and a copy has been wired Chairman Overstreet, of the Post-Office Committee of the House of

Chairman Overstreet, of the Post-Office Committee of the House of Representatives:

"Whereas a bill is now pending in the United States Congress by which it is proposed to radically decrease the allowance made by the Government for mail service performed by the railway companies; and

"Whereas the railway companies of the country are earnestly protesting that such reduction must result in the establishment of poorer facilities for the carrying out of the contract with transportation companies; and panies; and

"Whereas Omaha's interests demand that there shall be no change made that will in any wise cripple the present efficiency of the mail service: Therefore, be it

"Resoluced by the executive committee of the Commercial Club of Omaha, That we earnestly request that railroads interested be given a hearing, to the end that they may be permitted to present their side of the case and their arguments, in which they claim that the present compensation is no greater than is demanded, owing to the increased cost in carrying the mails."

Yours, very truly,

J. M. Guild, Commissioner.

OMAHA, NEBR., February 15, 1907.

OMAHA, NEBR., February 15, 1907.

Hon. John L. Kennedy, M. C., Washington, D. C.:

We are informed that House Post-Office Committee has placed in appropriation bill reductions in railroad mail pay. It is claimed by representatives of railroads that these heavy reductions, if put into effect, will make the handling of mail business so unattractive to railroads that it might seriously impair the efficiency of the public mail service, or make the running of special fast mail trains unprofitable. We regret very much any action which would impair the present service, and we would respectfully ask that this action of the committee be reconsidered and opportunity given railways to show that there is nothing in the present pay which justifies sweeping reductions, and that the matter be made the subject of thorough investigation and further action be determined only upon complete hearing of the evidence.

L. DRAKE,

President, Merchants' National Bank of Omaha,
L. L. KOUNTZ,

Cashier, First National Bank of Omaha.
C. F. McGrew,

Vice-President, Omaha National Bank.

Vice-President, United States National Bank.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a few words to the committee at this time in reference to my own views on this subject. I am in favor of any reasonable reduction to the Government in the cost of the transportation of the mails by the railroads, and I am opposed to any unreasonable reduction. I believe that the percentage reduction which is provided for in the following paragraph is reasonable and definite and ought to be sustained. I believe that the reduction provided for with reference to the postal cars is right and should stand. I believe that the provision requiring the railroad companies to carry the empty mail sacks free is unjust and should be rejected by the committee and the House. I believe that the confusion with reference to the weighing of the mails and the proper divisor is so great that no Member of this House knows what the effect of the proposed change would be; and I think the proper method is to ascertain what the effect of such a provision would be and then take it up for consideration and determination. To make any change in that matter at this time is to enter the domain of speculation. We do not know-and no Member of this House has been able to inform us—what would be the effect of the change of method. Now, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. A statement is made in the resolution and the telegram read in the gentleman's time that the Post-Office Committee of the House refused a hearing to the railroads. Does the gentleman know that statement is untrue, and that, as a matter of fact, the Post-Office Committee set apart two days, giving the railroads an opportunity in which to be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. FINLEY. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, does the gentleman know that the Post-Office Committee did give time to the railroads in which to be heard? And that when the time came the railroads stated that they had no wish to be heard?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will say, in answer to the gentleman, that I was informed by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads—and of course I accept his word for it-that the committee intimated that the railroads could have the 31st of January and the 1st of February to present their side of these questions. I was informed, however, that the intimation was not made until the 29th of January, and that the railroads claimed that they had not sufficient time to present their side of the controversy, and in that respect I think that the time was unreasonably short. I am not criticising the members of the committee for the shortness of the notice, because they had many matters to consider. But I say, in justice to the railroads and in the interest of an efficient public service, which we want out in our coun-try, that the railroads should have had more than two days in which to present the facts entering into this controversy.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that the arrangement to give them the 31st of January and the 1st of February was made when the railroad attorneys—not every one in the United States, but a number of them—were in Washington City. They were on the ground; they were advised; and they knew all the time what was going on. Now, I say to the gentleman that it is not true that the railroad companies had no opportunity to be heard.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that, allow me to say that I have no knowledge as to what representatives of the railroads were here, but I say to the chairman of the committee and to the House that there is a question here involved which is paramount to the question as to the rights of the railroads. The important proposition before this House is the question of an efficient mail service for the public-

Mr. FINLEY. Well, I will say to the gentleman— Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I have no interest in protecting the railroads, but I have—

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman is speaking in my time.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. But I have an interest in seeing that the country which I represent shall have sufficient facilities and fast mail.

Mr. FINLEY. I say to the gentleman that he is entirely mistaken. The railroads expressed their satisfaction with the

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I can not say what the railroad officials may have stated, but I say to the Chair and to the committee that it is not a question as to what will suit the railroads; it is a question of what will suit the country; it is a question as to what will give us an efficient mail service; as to whether we ought not to allow the law to stand substantially as it now is, continuing the fast-mail service until the whole matter can be fairly and fully investigated.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised at the suggestions made by my friend from South Carolina [Mr. Finley]. This is the first time during my experience here that matters that went on in a committee were talked about before the House. The gentleman has stated just now that the railroad company notified the committee that they did not want any hearings. Mr. FINLEY. Is that statement not true?

Mr. HEDGE. I will state to the gentleman, if I am compelled to-

Mr. FINLEY. I asked the gentleman that one question.

Mr. HEDGE. I do not think I am in order in pursuing this matter, but I will state that no authorized representatives of any railroad company, in my hearing, ever said they did not

Mr. FINLEY. Did anybody in the gentleman's hearing—anybody who was speaking for the railroads to the committee make that statement?

Mr. HEDGE. That is not a proper question, but I will ask the permission of this committee to answer it. I did say myself to the committee that if we could not have any more time than this, if the railroad representatives could not have until the next Monday to bring their experts here, that we did not want any hearing for those two days, because I could not find any-body but two railroad attorneys in town.

Mr. FINLEY. Was the gentleman speaking for the railroads in making that statement?

That is all I have to say. I said unless we Mr. HEDGE. could have until Monday we did not want any hearing.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. My point of order is that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] has precipitated a controversy which has compelled the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hedge] to make some reply relative to what took place within the confidence of the committee. I regret that it has been precipitated. I did not interpose the point of order until the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hedge] had at least some opportunity to make a reply. Now I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Gentlemen, of course, are familiar with the rule-

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to conclude? Gentlemen should not refer to proceedings in the committee.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I believe a point of order is now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order is pending. There is a pro forma amendment pending, which, without objection, will be withdrawn.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana made reference to me. I do not think the matter should close

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think any reference has been made that did not apply to both gentlemen; that both inadvertently

Mr. FINLEY. I am satisfied that the Chair did not catch the statement of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Indiana to say anything further than that two gentlemen had inadvertently violated one of the rules of the House.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman from Indiana did not say that we had violated any rule of the House in discussing committee matters. If the gentleman did make that statement, I should like to have him repeat it, and I wish to answer it

The CHAIRMAN. That was as the Chair understood it, the Chair will say to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I wish to answer that statement. That is a personal matter.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. My statement unquestionably was with reference to matters of a confidential character, in the precincts of the committee.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to say this

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman by unanimous consent may make a statement.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask unanimous consent. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. For how long? Mr. FINLEY. I do not think it is fair for the gentleman from Indiana to make a charge against me and then prevent my being heard.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have merely stated that I did not think the gentleman from South Carolina should, by an inquiry, have precipitated a controversy relative to matters which were undoubtedly of a confidential nature, within the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. FINLEY. If the Chair pleases, if I have consent— The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized to make a personal explanation.

Mr. FINLEY. I have made no statement in this body referring to the actions of the Post-Office Committee and the members of the committee in the committee room. But when a proposition is up before the Post-Office Committee in which the railroads are interested, giving time to the railroads for a hearing such as was taken and as I have stated, it is not a violation of any rule to state that fact here or anywhere else. As to what the committee did in executive session, I have divulged no fact bearing upon that. I know the rules of the House and I obey the rules of the House; but when the gentleman from Nebraska in the House attacks the Post-Office Committee, and charges that that committee acted unjustly toward the railroads in refusing them a hearing, and named the chairman of the committee; and when I simply came forward and stated the fact-refuted that charge by stating that time was given to the railroads and the statement was made to the Post-Office Committee by a party speaking to the committee that the railroads wished no hearings-I violated no rule, and I repudiate and spurn any such charge.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1907, for the transportation of mails on railroad routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of upward of 5,000 pounds by making the following reductions from the present rates per mile per annum for the transportation of mails on such routes: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of more than 5,000 pounds and less than 48,000 pounds, 5 per cent; 48,000 pounds and less than 80,000 pounds, 10 per cent; and $19 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds. Provided, That hereafter the average weight per day be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive days, not less than one hundred and five, at such times and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct: Provided further, That hereafter, at the time of the weighing of the mails at the periods required by law, empty mail bags shall not be weighed nor taken as any part of the total weight of the mails in estimating the pay for transportation of said mails.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the entire paragraph.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the Postmaster-General shall require all railroads carrying the mails to maintain their regular train schedules as to time of arrival and departure of said mails, and it shall be his duty to impose and collect reasonable fines for delay when such delay is not caused by unavoidable accidents or conditions.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire whether this is a change of existing law.

Mr. MURPHY. It is a change of existing law and is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question as to whether it is legislation on an appropriation bill is not always the test, because it very often happens that legislation is reenacted.

Mr. MANN. This inserts the word "hereafter," which makes it permanent law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the same paragraph as an amendment, with the word "hereafter" omitted.

Insert as a new paragraph the following:
"That the Postmaster-General shall require all railroads carrying the mails to maintain their regular train schedules as to time of arrival and departure of said mails, and it shall be his duty to impose and collect reasonable fines for delay when such delay is not caused by unavoidable accidents or conditions."

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I would like to have the point of order decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not decide the point of order in the absence of any information in regard to whether it changes existing law or not.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I submit that the burden is on the gentleman making the point of order to point out wherein the chair thinks the gentleman from Indiana is correct. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri, and the Chair would like the gentleman from Missouri, souri to point out whether this is a change of existing law.

Mr. MURPHY. It is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has once stated that that was not the test, because it often happens that existing law is reenacted in an appropriation bill, and the Chair can not tell whether this is a reenactment of existing law or not.

Mr. MURPHY. It is not a reenactment of existing law as I look at it.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman any information which he can give the Chair?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is not a difficult matter to get at; this is a copy of the language in the current law.

The CHAIRMAN. The troublesome question for the Chair is whether it is existing law or is current law.

rent law is the law that goes beyond the period of the appropriation act. This is a mere repetition of the law. I am not seeking to influence the Chair, but simply seeking to give the Chair information on the subject.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I submit that when a committee brings in a bill here, the Members of the House being sworn to obey the law, the presumption is that they are obeying the law and that the bill is not in conflict with the law. And in addition to that, when the gentleman from Missouri makes an objection, the burden is on him to show that the committee has not obeyed the existing law, and if he has not done that and the matter stands as it is, I say the Chair is well warranted in overruling the point of order, be-cause the presumption stands in favor of the committee obeying existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from Missouri has some information or can secure some information that this changes existing law the Chair will be constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. MURPHY. Then I want to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. MURPHY. I withdraw the point of order, and I will offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "conditions" insert "subject, however, to review both as to the law and the facts by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point of order

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order so as to come to a vote on the proposition.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order and reserve it. I do not understand what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again reported the

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order only because I wish some explanation of what the amendment is. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It is the language on page 22, lines 3 to 8.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized to speak to the merits of the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment, but I do not desire to displace the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MURPHY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not see the gentleman from Missouri when he recognized the gentleman from Indiana. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for several reasons. I do not believe the Post-Office Department should be permitted to summarily deal with anybody by taking it into their own hands and try a body or corporation and assess a fine as a punishment without review. This is somewhat similar to the legislation in relation to the fraud order which has been passed by this Congress. I believe that it is the purpose of our laws, or at least it ought to be, to give everybody and everything a day in court, in some way, somehow; and to permit an amendment of this kind, to allow an official of the Post-Office Department to try a man and convict him and collect his fine, I believe is an injustice. In the railroad-rate bill that was passed by this Congress we saw fit to provide that the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission should be reviewed by the courts, and almost all the legislation we have now upon the statute books gives every man and everything a day in court.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, under the law the mails are required to be conveyed with due frequency and speed. That is the language of the statute. The provision which we have recommended in the bill seeks to safeguard and support that provision of the statute. After schedules have once been adopted and the routes for the carrying of mails been agreed upon those schedules should be reasonably maintained, and in the absence of a proper observation of those rules and those schedules, fair and reasonable fines should be imposed. Therefore, I believe that the provisions contained in the bill will be ample to safeguard the interests of the Government, and the experience of the past few years has shown that no serious abuse will follow from the administration of the law. But, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri should be agreed to we will witness a number of trials in court equal to the entire number of failures to maintain the schedules, and that will precipitate not only great embarrassment upon the service, but it will entail an endless condition of controversies in the courts between the Department and the railroads. I sincerely hope, therefore, that the amend-ment offered by the gentleman from Missouri may be disagreed to, because it will undoubtedly entail such embarrassments as will result in innumerable trials if we are to permit the privilege of an appeal in every instance where a fine ought to be

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How long has the Post-Office Department been empowered to penalize, as this provides?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. For a long time—I have forgotten just the period—the penalties were assessed much as this provision authorizes under regulations of the Department. That method of penalizing dropped into inaction, and it was only a year ago that provision was made to revive it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that to leave this matter to the courts would so delay the execution of the law as to make it inoperative?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Undoubtedly. the information of the committee that the method pursued by the Department is to give every proper facility and time for explanations to be made of violations of the order, and where fair explanations are made, and it appears that accidents have caused the failure to maintain the schedules, no penalty is imposed.

It does not involve any great amount of assessment, but is in my judgment and in the judgment of the committee but a fair and proper provision to insure the best possible maintenance of these schedules, and I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

call for a vote, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of freight or expressage on postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, and empty mail bags, $250,000. And the Postmaster-General shall require, when in freightable lots and whenever practicable, the withdrawal from the mails of all postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps, in the respective weighing divisions of the country, immediately preceding the weighing period in said divisions, and such postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps, shall be transmitted by either freight or express.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph. I wish to ask the gentleman for information. This is the current law, as I understand, in the appropriation bill at least, and I suppose it has practice under it. What is the proposition? That during the three months of the weighing period the Government shall not give to the railroad companies the benefit of the postal cards, stamped envelopes, etc., and during the rest of the four-year period the Government makes the railroad carry these free of cost or otherwise. simply ask for information.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the practice has been for the weighing of the mails at each of the four several sections of the country once in four years and to report the average weight by which to fix the annual rate of pay. The practice in that connection has been to carry all empty mail bags and supplies of the Department just the same as in any other period of the year, and the weights of such empty bags and such supplies would become a part of the general weight of the mails. Inasmuch as that practice had obtained through a series of years, we provided for the elimination of freight and as many empty mail bags as would not embarrass the service from the general mail carriage and to carry them by freight. But because the rate of pay in the several four divisions had already been fixed by prior weighing, we directed that these supplies and empty mail bags should be withdrawn from those sections immediately preceding the new weighings and afterwards they should not go back into the mail, but should be carried by freight, so that the actual weights made in that division would be the mail itself carried and the necessary equipment incident to the mail, but that the supplies of the Department, including the surplus empty mail bags which would be distributed through the country, ought to go by freight.

Now, if I understand the purport of the gentle-Mr. MANN. man's statement, it certainly is a reform that is greatly to be desired. Do I understand under this that where these freight supplies ought to be carried by freight and not by mail at a high rate are withdrawn from the weighing during the threemonths period of the four years that after the three-months period they are still withdrawn from the mail cars and sent by Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. So that the railroad companies are not required to carry those free during the three years and nine months.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That is the right construction.

Mr. MANN. But of course there is nothing in the bill on that subject, I find.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It does not require it when we say "hereafter."

Mr. MANN. I understand. You say they shall be withdrawn

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. On page 31 of the bill the gentleman will find an item for an appropriation to pay the freight for these various supplies. In the language on page 31 of the bill is recited this very provision which is now under discussion, so that we have provided for the carrying and the pay of the freight and appropriated the money.

Mr. MANN. So that the intention of the gentleman is as fast as these weighing periods recur that the carrying of this freight matter shall cease by the mail cars.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Exactly so. Mr. MANN. All over the United States?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. All over the United States.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Will the gentleman please tell me—for I have never understood it— when the mail is weighed for the purpose of fixing the compensation?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Once in four years in each of the four weighing divisions of the country. There is what is called the eastern or the New England division, the southern, the middle, and the western. The period of weighing is usually from a date in February. The weighing for the third or western division began, I think, at midnight last night.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In the western division?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; in the middle division.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do they not weigh them all at the same time?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Simply because it takes too much time and expense to weigh them all at once.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who does the weighing?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It is weighed by the Government, under direction exclusively of the Government officers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Weighed at the post-office, at the depot, on the train, or how?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Both. All that goes on the train is weighed, and that which goes off is weighed, and then the calculation as to the distances is computed. It requires a very large corps of employees and a very careful computation and estimate in order to ascertain the average weight.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When do they ascertain the weight in the southern section?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have forgotten, but I

Mr. STAFFORD. Next year the mail will be weighed in the southern section.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Next year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am very much obliged for the information.

Mr. BONYNGE. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question in reference to a matter about which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] interrogated him. Reading the paragraph on page 31, to which the chairman of the committee has called the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], it would seem as if that appropriation was only to pay the freight during the three months' weighing period, as I read it.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It is for the entire fiscal year.

Mr. BONYNGE. It does not so read, as I understand the

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman now that my attention was called to that matter, and I looked at that provision on page 31, and that the position now taken by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bonynge] is exactly what the provision says. That had slipped from my mind. That is the reason I made the inquiry about it.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not think there is any question about that; the appropriation for freight carried by that item on page 31 is for carriage of freight during the entire fiscal year.

Mr. BONYNGE. I think, Mr. Chairman, in order to make it plain, when we come to page 31 we ought to have an amendment to that section.

Mr. MANN. Is it used for that purpose now? As I understand, that is in practice somewhere.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. In practice now under existing law.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter additional pay allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars shall be at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length, and $27.50 per mile per annum for 45-foot cars, and $32.50 per mile per annum for 50-foot cars, and $40 per mile per annum for cars 55 feet or more in length.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order. It is contrary to existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the point of order lodged only against the proviso?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is directed against the proviso, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HEDGE. Just against the proviso; that is all.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Railway Mall Service: Eleven division superintendents, at $3,000 each; 11 assistant division superintendents, at $1,800 each; 5 assistant superintendents, at $1,600 each; 126 chief clerks, at $1,600 each; 260 clerks, class 6, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 1,250 clerks, class 2, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 530 clerks, class 5, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 530 clerks, class 5, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 1,850 clerks, class 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 2,150 clerks, class 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 2,150 clerks, class 2, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 2,150 clerks, class 2, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 2,150 clerks, class 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 860 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; 1,200 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 800 each; 1,200 each; 1,200 each; 800 each; 1,200 each; 8

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the paragraph, which seeks to perfect the para-

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Against the entire paragraph?

Mr. MACON. It changes existing law. It increases the salary of every clerk.
The CHAIRMAN.

The proviso seems to be subject to the point of order, and therefore the whole paragraph goes out. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman make the point of order to the entire paragraph? Does he mean to cripple the Railway Mail Service by not providing any appropriation for that great service, which brings advantage to his district as well as to every district in the country?

Mr. MACON. In reply to that I will answer the gentleman's question by asking him another. I would like to know why it is that every time I offer a point of order against an increase of salary by wholesale somebody wants to attack me about it? The CHAIRMAN. The discussion is out of order on both sides. There is nothing before the committee. The Clerk will read.

I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already stricken out the entire paragraph with a point of order.

Mr. MACON. I would like to strike out the last word of the

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that for the purpose of asking a question. That paragraph is really a part of the preceding paragraph and refers to the sum in the preceding paragraph, and I would like to ask-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say to my friend from Illinois that unless some provision should be made to reinstate the authority for expenditure for the Railway Mail Service, which has gone out of a point of order, the entire postal service of the Government would be absolutely paralyzed.

Therefore it will be necessary to resort to some measure whereby we can reinstate this language, and I have no doubt but what some measure will be provided to appropriate for railway mail clerks. The gentleman will appreciate that there can not possibly be any Railway Mail Service unless we provide it, and the service will be absolutely paralyzed. Therefore the only way to do is to take up the time of the House and find some way to get the matter into the bill which the gentleman from Arkansas has seen fit to raise the point of order against; and I ask that the reading proceed.

Mr. MACON. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin asked me a question a moment ago, and I answered his question by asking another, but I did not receive a reply.

Mr. STAFFORD. - Mr. Chairman, if it will accommodate the gentleman, and in favor of expedition, I will withdraw the question, if that is satisfactory to the gentleman.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, with the question withdrawn, I will say that it is passing strange to me why it is that every time I make a point of order against the increase of salaries by the wholesale on an appropriation bill, in violation of the rules of the House, some one feels called upon to attack my act; but not a single protest do you hear when Members rise and make points of order against provisions of similar bills where it is sought by such provision to reduce extortionate railway mail Wherever the railroads are interested it is absolutely impossible to have a provision enacted into law that affects their excessive pay one single cent; nor can a Member get anyone here to join him in his efforts to reduce their pay; nor do you hear any protests against the Member's course who makes a point of order against a provision that looks to a reduction of railroad pay. But when an effort is made to prevent the profli-gate waste of the people's money by a wholesale increase of sal-But when an effort is made to prevent the profliaries, a storm of protest is raised that fairly shakes the rafters. I can not understand such a condition. We are supposed to be representing the people and not the railroads, and yet the railroads can arouse a greater interest in this House than the people appear to be able to do, unless it be the officeholding class, who are ever clamoring for an increase of salary. Mr. Chairman, I repeat I can not understand the condition.

The Clerk read as follows:

For substitutes for clerks on vacation, $50,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may allow railway postal clerks whose duties require them to work six days or more per week, fifty-two weeks per year, an annual vacation of fifteen days with pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order. Mr. LEVER. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "clerks," on page 24, line 7, to and including the word "year," in line 18, and strike out the rord "annum," on page 24, line 18, and insert in lieu thereof the word annual."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. May the amendment be read as it will affect the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be reported as desired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I would like the amendment to be read as the paragraph will be amended.

Mr. LEVER. I ask that the amendment be read for informa-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk finds some difficulty in locating what the gentleman desires.

Mr. LEVER. I will read the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I want it understood that I am not waiving the point of order, because I do not know what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Wisconsin to reserve the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. The paragraph will read in this way if the amendment is passed:

That the Postmaster-General n.y.y allow railway postal clerks an annual vacation of fifteen days with pay.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman reserve it?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will reserve the point of Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take the time of the committee.

Mr. MANN. We may as well dispose of the point of order. The amendment is in order. The existing provision is subject to the point of order, but the amendment is germane to it, and is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I much prefer to have my point of order decided by the Chair. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentle-man from South Carolina that his amendment proposes to amend a part of the bill which has not yet been read.

Mr. LEVER. I think it has been read, begging the Chair's pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment striking out the word "annum," in page 24, line 18.

Mr. LEVER. If the Chair will indulge me just a moment, I can easily explain to the Chair the purport of the amendment.

The amendment strikes out-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman who offered the amendment, the word offered to be amended, in line 18, page 24, in the reprint is "annual." The amendment is to strike out the word "annum" and insert the word " annual."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that portion of the amendment, then. I did not have the reprint here. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted—

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, subject to the reserved point of order, it will be treated as so amended. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Now I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph by striking out the words "whose duties require them to work six days or more per week, fifty-two weeks per year;" so that the proviso will read as follows:

"For substitutes for clerks on vacation, $50,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may allow rallway postal clerks an annual vacation of fifteen days with pay."

Mr. LEVER. Now, do I understand that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] raises a point of order against that?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes; I do.
Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, without arguing the point of order, leaving that to the Chair, of course, expressing my own opinion that it is not subject to the point of order, I want to say that last year I offered this same amendment to the postoffice appropriation bill, in the hope that the House would do common justice to the 14,000 railway mail clerks in the Government service. That amendment last year was defeated by a small vote in the House. It happened to be late in the evening; very few of the Members were present, and I feel more confident to-day in submitting this proposition to the full membership of the House, because I believe they want to act fairly and squarely with this branch of the service. It is not necessary for me to argue that there is no class of employees in the Government service who do harder work or more hazardous and dangerous work than the railway mail clerks, and it does seem to me, in view of the fact that every other class of employees of the Government have from fifteen to thirty days' annual leave with pay, that we ought to give to the railway mail clerks a like showing. The employees of the Government here in Washington get not only thirty days' annual leave, but get thirty days' sick leave with pay, and I submit that it is no more than fair that we should give the 14,000 railway mail clerks, who each day take their lives in their hands in the service of the Government, a fair and equal showing with other employees of the Government. If my amendment prevails, that will be the effect of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I wish to submit to the Chair that my amendment—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on his point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I made the point of order in addition to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and before the point of order is decided I want to call the attention of the House, as well as the attention of the gentleman who has offered this amendment, to this situation: The proviso offers fifteen days' annual leave to postal clerks who are employed fifty-two weeks in the year. That means fifteen days' annual leave to a clerk who is employed a year. The amendment offered by the gentleman would give the same fifteen days' annual leave to all postal clerks, whether employed for fifty-two weeks in the year or not. The gentleman will understand that postal clerks do not work consecutively throughout the entire They will be on duty a number of days and then off duty for a number of days, four on and four off or five on and five off being the usual practice. Therefore to adopt this amendment would be to give all of the clerks fifteen days' annual leave, even though they had a certain number of days off duty in each week. Now, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that if he insists on this amendment, and the Chair should hold, as I think the Chair must hold, that the amendment is contrary to existing law, and therefore subject to the point of order, it is apt to carry with it the proviso now in the law. Therefore there would not be any annual leave. If the gentleman will withdraw his amendment, I will withdraw my point of order, which will leave the matter as it now stands in the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What do they now get?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Fifteen days' annual leave where they work fifty-two weeks in the year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Fifteen days' annual leave, with or without pay?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, with pay.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell me—
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I want it understood that the point of order may reach back to the entire proviso.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, I beg to ask if any point of order was reserved on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the point of order was reserved against the amendment and was not reserved against the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, I do not care to enter into any bargain about this matter, but I want to say to him that when these railway-mail clerks are not on their regular rounds my understanding is that they are employed in the study of schedules and doing other work necessary to their more efficient service, and it does seem to me that they should be given a fair showing, and if we can not give it to them by the amendment I have offered, it seems to me the Post-Office Committee ought to bring in some kind of an amendment which will give them a fair showing.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I want to say that I was talking sometime ago with a railway mail clerk operating between Nashville and Cincinnati or Louisville. He showed me how he did his work on the train. He said that as soon as he got to the end of his run he had to take up the "study of geography," and I think he said that he had to stand an examination every now and then. He is thus "going to school," as it were, practically all the time, because we are constantly making new rural routes and new postal routes he must study, and hence he practically has no mental vacation. I was about to ask the gentleman who reported the bill how much time the postal clerk gets for rest, to go fishing, to go out in the sunshine in the country and lie down on the ground and absorb electricity from the earth, and thus revitalize himself. Now, if this is subject to a point of order, I say in God's name these postal clerks, who run all hours of the day and night through the epidemics and through the storms and through everything that a locomotive can pull them, ought to have as much rest and more than the people who live in the city of Washington or in Nashville, where there is no danger to life and limb, and where they can rest or go to the theaters or go fishing. I do not think the postal clerks are treated exactly fair, if the facts are as have been stated here.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Olmsted). Under the act of 1906 the Postmaster-General may allow railway postal clerks whose dutles require them to work six days or more a week and fifty-two weeks in the year an annual vacation of fifteen days with pay. That is permanent law, and would still be in force even though the paragraph just read or the proviso were omitted entirely. But the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina strikes out certain words and would change the permanent provision of law. It therefore violates the rules of the House, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For acting clerks, in place of clerks injured while on duty, and to enable the Postmaster-General to pay the sum of $1,000, which shall be exempt from the payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives of any railway postal clerk or substitute railway postal clerk who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury, $100,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph, to be inserted here.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to paragraph on page 25, after line 2, the following:

"Acting or substitute letter carriers, rural letter carriers, post-office clerks, railway mail clerks, and other employees connected with the postal service who are temporary employees shall be paid at the usual rate for each day's service."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem allowance of assistant superintendents while actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 per day, $27,500; and for their necessary official expenses not covered by their per diem allowance, not exceeding $2,500; in all, $30,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I do not know where this form comes from or whether the gentleman wishes to maintain it. It makes an appropriation "not to exceed $2,500." It is a very unusual provision and might be a little dangerous. Why not strike out the words "not to exceed," and make the appropriation $2,500?

"not to exceed," and make the appropriation $2,500?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say that this is a provision which has been carried for some time and no change is made by the language of this bill. In the current law it is in just the same language as it is in the proposed measure. It is only to provide against any expense over $2,500 for expenses during the entire year where expenses are allowed. It is found to be about that on an average, and to guarantee that it shall not exceed that we put in that limitation. There is no change in existing law in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation of mail by electric and cable cars, $870,000: Provided, That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the rate now paid to companies performing such service, except that the Postmaster-General, in cases where the quantity of mail is large and the number of exchange points numerous, may, in its discretion, authorize payment for closed-pouch service at a rate per mile not to exceed one-third above the rate per mile now paid for closed-pouch service; and for mail cars and apartments carrying the mails, not to exceed the rate of 1 cent per linear foot per car-mile of travel: Provided further, That the rates for electric-car service on routes over 20 miles in length outside of cities shall not exceed the rates paid for service on steam railroads: Provided, however, That $172,600 of the sum in this item appropriated is hereby made available for the purpose of covering the cost of mail service by underground electric cars in the city of Chicago, Ill., now under contract.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska, Mr. Chairman, I. move to

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. A year ago I called the attention of the chairman of that committee to the condition of our suburban mail service. For instance, under the present law we have a star-route service between Omaha and Benson, the distance being 4 or 5 miles, which costs $550 per annum, whereas the electric street car company which passes the post-office at both ends of the line can be paid only $250. In other words, the chairman may remember that we are given an inferior service, costing more than double what could be paid for the better electric car service. I would like to ask if the committee has yet considered that subject.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The committee has not gone into any great consideration of that subject, Mr. Chairman. I may say, in this connection, that there has been considerable pressure brought upon the committee by representatives of various electric and cable car companies to authorize a higher rate of pay. The committee has not felt that it could authorize that higher rate, even though there might be some particular locality where the conditions ought to have some attention, so that we have not foreclosed against it nor have we any defined opinions as to any general statute which we care to recommend.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what the objection is to increasing the cost of electric car service on the short runs of, say, not to exceed 10 miles, where the service would be much more efficient and much more rapid than now?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have no data upon which I can base any answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Is it not true that no reasonable increase per mile would lead to any very extended change in service, if the routes were short?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The only difficulty in the way of accepting such a proposition would be this: If the House should change the rate to double that which is now authorized for cable-car service, limiting it to the application of a 10-mile service, would simply give a leverage for the extension of the privilege to longer runs.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Could not the chairman of the committee hold the lever down with his committee?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. He is trying his best to hold it down now, and if it is hard to hold down on a 3-mile route I think it would be much harder on a 20-mile route.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I wish to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that the day has gone by when we ought to be carrying mails between great cities and their suburbs on buckboards. I am not criticising the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It may be it is the duty of the Department to figure it out, but I say there ought to somewhere in the Post-Office Department or in the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads brains enough to frame some measure which would give us prompt and efficient service at reasonable rates.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads

why it is necessary to pick out one single city of all the cities in the Union and say just how much money shall be appropriated for that city for that particular purpose?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. To what does the gentleman refer?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I refer to page 26, under the proviso which gives just how much money shall be appropriated for this service in the city of Chicago.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will state to the gentleman that is to carry out the provision of a contract which authorized the carrying of mail by tunnel service in Chicago, which is a peculiar contract and takes the place of the screen-wagon service contract, and it was made applicable to this appropriation rather than to the screen-wagon appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of foreign mails, $3,268,000: Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster-General shall be authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary, not exceeding $105,000, to cover one-half of the cost of transportation, compensation, and expense of clerks to be employed in assorting and pouching mails in transit on steamships between the United States and other postal administrations in the International Postal Union, and not exceeding $40,000 for transferring the foreign mail from incoming steamships in New York Bay to the steamship and rallway piers, and for transferring the foreign mail from incoming steamships in San Francisco Bay to the piers.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking my colleague some questions. In lines 15 and 16 this language is used: "For transportation of foreign mails, $3,268,000." Will my colleague, the chairman of the committee, please make plain how much of that appropriation is made for the purpose of carrying the mail in American ships under the so-called "ship-subsidy act of 1891."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, under the act of March 3, 1891, known as the "ocean mail service," authority is given for contracts for the payment to shipping companies of an amount in excess of what it would be when the payment would be placed entirely and absolutely upon the weight of mail. Under that authority there are now seven or eight contracts, and for the information of Members I will insert at this point in the RECORD the table which I have now, showing the numbers and names of the routes under these seven or eight contracts, the lines over which the vessels are carried, and the amount of money called for under these con-These contracts now in existence entail a charge upon this item of appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, of $1,430,456.40. That amount of money must come out of the item to which my colleague called my attention.

I also have, Mr. Chairman, which I will insert in the RECORD at the same time as a part of my remarks for the information of the House, two, three, or four tables which will give full information of the various contracts under the act of March 3, Next is a table of the various mail services. These tables will disclose the amount of mail carried on each of the several lines, the lines and the terminals of the lines, and in addition the compensation by years for the last several years. I also have a smaller table showing the contracts which have been abandoned under authority of that law, and also the vessels which are used under those contracts.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether that statement covers the amount we are now paying to foreign steamships?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. These tables will cover the total amounts being paid under the act of March 3, 1891.

Mr. WALDO. That does not answer my question.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I say these tables will show that. The tables do not show the amount paid to foreign vessels. Will the gentleman kindly put in with the Mr. WALDO. statement a definite and particularized statement of the amount now being paid to foreign steamship lines per annum?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not have at hand all the detailed information for which the gentleman has asked, and I fear I will not have time to compile it during the day.

Mr. WALDO. Can not that be obtained from the Department, so you can put it in with that statement?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It can be obtained, I have no doubt, from the Department, but unfortunately I will not have the time to compile it before the end of the day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman has leave, under the order of the House, to print the paper to which he refers in the Record. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALDO. I ask leave to have printed, with the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, a statement of the amount paid to foreign ocean steamships by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana, in regard to these tables he proposes to file, whether they are the result of his compilation or the Post-Office Department or any bureau of the Government?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. They are compiled at my request and obtained from the records of the Department. They are not all compiled by the postal authorities, as some of my own clerks assisted in the compilation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do those tables show in regard to the oriental service the frequency of mail service now had under existing contracts?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Not entirely the oriental service.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do these tables undertake to show in any case the frequency of mail service under those contracts?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Not the tables; no, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. Have you any data on that?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Not at hand, but as I said a while ago, I think that data can be secured from the report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was unfortunately out of the Chamber when the gentleman began his remarks, and I would like to ask him to tell me briefly, if he can, just what the tables do show. I do not want him to repeat his statement in detail.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The tables show the contracts under ocean mail service for which this appropriation is made in detail showing the line, the terminals, the vessels, the amount of mail carried, and the compensation.

Mr. SHERLEY. But do not show the frequency with which the mail is carried, you say?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; I think not.
Mr. SHERLEY. Well, do not the contracts show that?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The contracts may, but I have not that in detail. My compilation was with a view of advising the House of the amount of money expended under this appropriation and the lines to which it went. I did not have such details as the gentleman has inquired about.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was in hope the gentleman might give us information showing what service we had to the Orient and other foreign countries.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not recall any routes to the Orient under this. I will insert the following tables:

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand, then, that the gentleman's tables simply relate to contracts under the law of 1891, and do not undertake to show also the existing arrangements for foreign mails under other contracts made by the Post-Office De-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If the gentleman had been present he would have understood that I was making the statement as applicable to this appropriation, in order to show what provision of the appropriation was applicable to the contracts authorized by the act of March 3, 1891

Mr. SHERLEY. These tables, however, do not convey a complete idea as to the foreign-mail service that is now had?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The information is not com-

Mr. SHERLEY. It is very incomplete, is it not? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I am sorry that I can not advise the gentleman as far as he wishes to be advised.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want the gentleman to advise me. I want him not to give the House a false impression.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman had been present and heard my statement, and had not been absent, as he said he was, he would have understood that I was explaining a part only of this, and therefore I hope he will not leave the insinuation of my leaving a false impression.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, the gentleman is supersensitive. He should know that I have no desire in any sense to reflect upon him. Neither do I for a moment think that he would willingly give to the House misinformation. But I know very well from personal examination, as the gentleman probably knows, that the mail service provided simply under the act of 1891 is not anything like the complete service that now exists in regard to mail service with foreign countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CROMER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment, by striking out the last three words. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Does this appropriation include a provision for the carrying of the mails to

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Certainly. There is a contract under the act of March 3, 1891.

Mr. CROMER. That has been brought under contract?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana, Certainly,

Mr. CROMER. How much was paid for carrying the mail there last year?

OVERSTREET of Indiana. The annual charge is

Is that what it cost last year?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes. I am not sure; it is what it has cost since the contract went into effect. The gentleman will understand that the act of 1891 authorized certain contracts, and then when those contracts are entered into Congress appropriates the money to pay, under the terms of the contract. I do not recall just when the contract for the mail from San Francisco to Tahiti went into effect, but from the time it went into effect the annual charge has been $42,180.

Mr. CROMER. Does the gentleman know whether we are now carrying annually to Tahiti more than 200 pounds of Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not know, and, so far as that is concerned, we are helpless under this appropriation, because we are obliged to appropriate to cover the contracts under that law.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I assume, inasmuch as we are about to take a final vote upon this paragraph, which deals with the foreign mails and their transportation, that the purpose of inserting these tables in the RECORD is not to help the House to a determination upon any question involved in this bill. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], the chairman of the committee, if I am not correct in that assumption?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have introduced those tables to explain as fully as I could the appropriation which is now before the House.

Mr. SULLIVAN. But inasmuch as the tables will not be in the Record until to-morrow and while the vote upon the question is to be taken within the space of perhaps five minutes, obviously the information can not guide the House to an intelligent determination of the question.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit me, I have never seen, since I have been associated with the Post-Office Committee, an instance where there was any detailed information covering this service filed of record, and I desired to have some record showing these inquiries. I have had a number of inquiries asking whether there were any contracts under the law, and if so, what they were. When I first started to get up the information I did not think it would take up as many tables as it has, but, having gotten the information, I think that it all ought to be put in.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I appreciate the gentleman's purpose of informing some future House as to the cost of this service, but I thought there was something more than a mere coincidence in the publication of the information at this time, and it occurred to me, perhaps, that the answer which will be found in these tables might probably be taken to back the cause of the ship-subsidy bill, which, I understand, is to be brought up soon. Has the gentleman any information as to whether it has any relation to the argument in favor of that question?

Mr. WATSON. And if it had, would the gentleman from Massachusetts object to having it printed in the Record?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Not if it were complete; but I would like to say that if it be any answer on that subject that that information which is against should also be given, so that the House might pass intelligent judgment upon the subject.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the consideration of the subject of the ship-subsidy bill did have some influence in the matter in putting the information into the RECORD, but not in aid of the bill itself. It began by some inquiries which I had by letters from some of my own constituents, whose inquiries clearly showed a lack of information concerning existing contracts in ocean mail service; and when I first directed one of my clerks to compile a part of this information it was for the purpose of answering those inquiries, and in inserting this in the RECORD if it can in any degree throw any light upon the subject I will be very glad to have it shown. If, on the other hand, it is subject to a proper criticism, I would be the last one to deny the gentleman from Massachusetts that privilege.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Now, then, the gentleman's attention having been called to the fact, so that he realizes his publication in the RECORD officially will be beneficial, will favor the shipsubsidy measure, I trust that, as an upright judge, he will put all the information into the RECORD, whether it favors or does not favor the ship-subsidy bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman that I directed my inquiry to the contracts and not to cover the question of the ship-subsidy bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation for the fiscal year 1907 of $25,000 for the employment of special counsel to prosecute and defend suits affecting the second-class mailing privilege is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1908.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, after line 12, insert as a separate paragraph the follow-on page 28, after line 12, insert as a separate paragraph the tolowing:

"Semiweekly and triweekly newspapers shall be transported and delivered through the mails in the same manner and at the same rate of postage as is or may be the regulation or rate of postage applicable to weekly newspapers."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I make the point of order

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I reserve the point of order. Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the necessity for this amendment is simply this: Under existing law in cities and towns where they have city service the postage on semi-weekly and triweekly newspapers on city circulation is 1 cent per copy, or more than the subscription price for such papers, while weekly papers pay 1 cent per pound. It is a discrimination that was not intended when the present law was passed. The law in reference to this matter was enacted more than twenty-five years ago. It was at a time when rural free delivery had not been tried or established and when there was no city delivery in towns where the old home county weekly newspapers were published. The introduction into our mail service of rural free delivery has made such a change in the situation as to discriminate now between the weekly paper and semi-weekly and the triweekly papers that must of necessity take its place. At the time when this law was enacted the old "county paper," as it was commonly known, was published at the paper," as it was commonly known, was published at the county seat and had general circulation throughout the county. The demand of its patrons for news and for local county information has called for its publication two and three times weekly instead of once a week.

This matter was submitted to the Department by me, and my attention was called to the fact that the situation was fixed by law, so that they could not change the postage rate and give justice to the triweekly and semiweekly newspapers. I here read a letter from the Post-Office Department, which is self-explanatory:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, October 2, 1996.

Hon. C. B. RANDELL, Sherman, Tex.

Hon. C. B. RANDELL, Sherman, Tex.

Dear Sir: Your communication of the 27th ultimo, addressed to the Postmaster-General, relative to the rate of postage on semiweekly newspapers mailed for local delivery by city letter carriers at city lettercarrier post-offices, has been referred to this office.

In reply I have the honor to invite your attention to the following extract from the act of March 3, 1885, amendatory to the act of March 3, 1879:

"All publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25 of said act (of March 3, 1879, ch. 180, 1 Supp., 249), when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall " be entitled to transmission through the mails at 1 cent a pound or a fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid as now provided by law." (Act of March 3, 1885, ch. 342, 1 Supp. R. S., 483; sec. 448, Postal Laws and Regulations.)

The proviso in section 25 of the act of March 3, 1879, reads as

The proviso in section 25 of the act of March 3, 1879, reads as follows:

"Provided, That the rate of postage on newspapers, excepting weeklies, and periodicals not exceeding 2 ounces in weight, when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, shall be uniform at 1 cent each; periodicals weighing more than 2 ounces shall be subject, when delivered by such carriers, to a postage of 2 cents each, and these rates shall be prepaid by stamps affixed. (Act of March 3, 1879; ch. 180, sec. 25, 1 Supp. Rev. Stat., p. 249; sec. 452, Postal Laws and Regulations.)

You will perceive that all newspapers other than weeklies mailed at city letter-carrier offices for local delivery by city letter carrier are subject to postage at the rate of 1 cent each, to be prepaid with stamps affixed, while weekly newspapers may be so mailed by the publishers thereof at the rate of 1 cent a pound. These rates, however, are fixed by law, and the Department is without authority to modify them.

Respectfully,

A. M. Travers,

A. M. TRAVERS, Acting Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

A bill in the language of this amendment was introduced in this House by me at this session, and was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. There has been little time for its consideration, but it is a matter of present necessity and vital importance throughout the United States, because almost every county paper of general circulation is published in a town where they have city delivery. That being the case it must remain a weekly, or all its city patrons must be supplied at an expense, merely for postage, exceeding the amount of the subscription price. The circulation in the town is necessary for the healthful condition of the paper, in order that it may have the proper advertising patronage. Its prosperity is of special interest to the country people, for it is their home paper. is no remedy, except to let this provision be placed on this bill.

It is true it is new legislation and can, under the rules of this House, be defeated by making the point of order. But its enactment would be simple justice to the county papers which desire to keep step with the progress of the times. I make this plea for the old home country paper that has always stood for the good morals of the community and has ever upheld independent thought and clean politics. Let such publications reach their home people two and three times a week without being discriminated against by an ancient statute. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] will withdraw his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana, I insist on the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Supplies for the rural-delivery service, including collection boxes, furniture, satchels, badges, straps, map supplies, freight, drayage and cartage charges, repairing, satchels and furniture, repairing, erecting, and painting collection boxes in the rural-delivery service, $85,000.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 30, after line 9, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"Postmasters at offices from which rural free-delivery routes emanate may permit Representatives in Congress and United States Senators to have access to and make copies of the list of patrons of the respective rural routes emanating from such office: Provided, That this permission shall be granted only to such Representatives or Senators in person or to such person as the Senator and Representative may in writing declare to be his regularly employed secretary or clerk."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I think it is clearly subject to the point of order, and I should like to finish the bill tonight.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes a point or order, which the Chair sustains. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That on and after July 1, 1907, letter carriers of the rural-delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $840 per annum: Provided, That rural letter carriers after twelve months' service shall be allowed annual leave with pay not to exceed fifteen days; the substitutes for carriers on vacation to be paid during said service at the rate paid the carrier: Provided further, That not to exceed $12,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations: And provided further, That in the discretion of the Postmaster-General the pay of any rural carrier on a water route who furnishes his own power boat, and is employed during the summer months, may be fixed at an amount not exceeding $720 in any one calendar year.

Mr. Chairman, following out the course.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, following out the course of action which I indicated yesterday, and for the reasons then stated, I make the point of order against the language contained in lines 15 to 21, inclusive, on page 30. It is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes a point of order against that part of the paragraph beginning in line 15 and down to and including line 21.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. CROMER. Part of that paragraph is existing law.

Mr. CROMER. Part of that paragraph is existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is subject to the point of order if any part of it is a change in existing law.

Mr. CROMER. But it is only one part of the paragraph—

The CHAIRMAN. If any part of the paragraph be subject to a point of order, then the whole paragraph is subject to a point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert, after line 14, page 30, the following:

"That from and after the 1st day of July, 1907, the compensation of rural letter carriers shall be $900 per annum.

"That in addition to the compensation fixed by law there shall be allowed and paid to each rural letter carrier who carries a lock pouch reasonable compensation, to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, for the service performed.

"That in addition to above each carrier shall be allowed and paid $100 each year for use of horse and vehicle used in the service."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order against that. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes a point of order, which the Chair sustains. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

To defray expenses incident to the shipment of supplies in accordance with legislation embodied in the "Act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes" (namely, "And the Postmaster-General shall require, when in freightable lots and whenever practicable, the withdrawal from the mails of * * * furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service * * in the respective weighing divisions of the country immediately preceding the weighing period in said divisions, and such * * * furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service * * shall be transmitted by either freight or express"), including hardware, boxing, package, cartage, and the pay of one carpenter and three laborers for assignment in connection therewith, $100,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The very distinguished gentleman in charge of the bill, as 1 understand, says that this covers the cost of the freight for a year, but the language of the provision seems to provide only for a three months' period. Now, can the gentleman tell us what is the fact in reference to the past and current expenditures:

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will notice between lines 9 and 16 the language is in parentheses, and that language is for the purpose of identifying the statute of 1906, which is applicable to the current fiscal The appropriation so defraying the expenses incident to the shipment of supplies is in accordance with the provisions of that act. Now, that act did not go into effect until the 1st of July, 1906, and was applicable only to the withdrawal of supplies at the beginning of the next weighing period, and that weighing period did not begin until midnight last. Therefore there is doubt as to what amount will be used this fiscal year. But my contention is, Mr. Chairman-and I am entirely frank in saying that if the language is indefinite and ambiguous I will not oppose any proper amendment—my contention is that the $100,000 that is carried by this item is intended clearly and does authorize the payment of expenses incident to the shipment of the supplies withdrawn under the authority which is identified by the language within the parentheses.

Now, if I am wrong about that, I will be glad to have some one of the committee point it out.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman says this is for supplies withdrawn in accordance with the law. Is that withdrawal only for three months?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. When these supplies are withdrawn they are thereafter carried by freight.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does the gentleman say that $100,000 will pay the expenses for the year for carrying supplies and empty mail bags'

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The empty mail bag freight is in another item.

Mr. BONYNGE. They are to be withdrawn during the period

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. On page 22 there is an appropriation of $250,000 which will pay the freight on the empty mail bags Mr. BONYNGE. Does the gentleman think $100,000 will pay for the balance? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The balance of the supplies; that is the estimate of the Department.

Mr. BONYNGE. For a year?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. For a year.

Mr. GILHAMS. Mr. Chairman, I have been much interested in the discussions that have taken place here upon this floor with regard to the increase of salaries of the employees of the Postal Department of our country. I fully believe that the com-mittee has been earnestly and conscientiously endeavoring to do that which they believe will give us the best and most efficient service possible with the money at their command. I believe also that they have earnestly endeavored to place the salaries at the highest point possible and yet retain the position of making the Post-Office Department self-supporting. It is evident that it is a difficult task for the committee to adjust and arrange all these increases to the perfect satisfaction of all, especially when limited to the amount of the income of the Department, yet upon the whole I think that the adjustment in this bill has been highly satisfactory.

If we expect to continue the efficiency of the service in the Post-Office Department of our country, it is absolutely necessary to make a substantial increase in the salaries of the employees. This is a time when abundant opportunities are existing everywhere for young men to enter into business enterprises upon their own responsibility and initiative, which affords ample opportunities for financial success far in excess of that which can be acquired in the service of the Department. There is no field open for business opportunity and financial gain to any extent in the service of the Postal Department. Their time is absolutely taken within the narrow sphere of routine work, and they are forced to the most rigid economy if they lay by anything for a future competency.

In the railway mail service there is added to it also the great hazard of accident and of death from railway accidents. They are required to live almost constantly upon these postal trains, thereby jeopardizing their lives at every hour. Surely they can not be criticised for asking any advance or increase for their services. This service requires quick, intelligent, and able men, with an abundance of good health to stand the excessive strain and do the work. They are very often required to put in excessive hours in order that the distribution of mails may not be de-There is another class of employees in the service of the Postal Department known as the "rural carriers," of which we have about 40,000 in the service, whose work carries them out into the open country over all kinds of roads and in all kinds of weather, from the hot and burning suns of the summer to the cold and bleak and drifting snows of the winter, with roads well-nigh impassable, which makes it very wearing upon both carrier and horses, and I feel, with the expense for equipment for this service, that they have not been receiving pay sufficient to secure for them a livelihood and make it possible to lay by anything for the future. The Postal Department, or any other Department of the service of our country, should not ask of its employee that he perform the service without a competency sufficient by reasonable economy to provide a living and leave a reasonable sum to provide for declining years. With the equipment that is necessary by the rural carrier it is evident that the salary paid has not been sufficient for him to lay by anything as a provision for old age.

I feel that this committee in reporting favorably upon an increase of salary to these rural carriers of $120 per year have done what they believed to be all that was justifiable at this time in the face of the fact of a deficit in the last fiscal year. I was much in hopes, however, that they might see fit to add $180 to the present salary for the standard rural route. It would seem to me that it would be possible to make a considerable decrease in the pay for the railway mail service in the class of the heaviest tonnage per mile, which would make a material saving that might enable the Department to sufficiently increase all employees and still keep its expense within the receipts. However, I offer in no sense any criticism to the report of this committee, for I believe that they have done everything in their power, from the evidence at hand, to make this adjustment as near equitable as possible between the salaries of the employees and the payment for railway service in the carrying of mail from the receipts at hand. I desire to say further that I am greatly disappointed in the point of order being raised by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] against the appropriation for increase of salaries for clerks and carriers in cities on the grounds of its being new legislation; and I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will reconsider his determination to raise the point of order against the paragraph proposing an increase of salaries to the rural carriers. But if this should be insisted upon I sincerely hope that some means may be devised, or provided by which this very necessary increase—as was provided by this bill for clerks and carriers in cities and the rural carriers--may be obtained at the hands of this House at this session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to do anything except to call the attention of the Post-Office Committee to this The provision in the bill refers to the appropriation law for the fiscal year ending June 30 next. The provision in the law is merely in reference to the transportation by freight for the ninety days immediately preceding any weighing period, so that for the balance of the year there is no provision of law for carrying these postal cars, etc., by freight. I call the attention of the gentleman to the situation for the purpose of having this matter, if not remedied in this committee—and I am not prepared to offer any amendment—to have it remedied in another body which will have to consider this bill and by another committee which will have to consider the bill. Clearly the language in the present bill only relates to the provision in existing law, an existing law which only provides for carrying the mail during the ninety days immediately preceding the weighing period.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman if, in order to make it effective, there should not be some language making it effective for the next year?

Mr. MANN. If I may answer the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Indiana stated that it was the policy of the Government, or should be the policy of the Government, and I think we have adopted the policy, to take out of the mail heavy freight matter that is carried from Washington to the post-offices. The provision of the current law for the fiscal year 1906-7 provides that it shall be taken out during the three months. That is carried in existing law; and the question that arises is whether the Government would carry the freight during the balance of the period, and the gentleman from Indiana stated, as I understood, that it was the policy of the Government to carry this heavy matter by freight all the time.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I call the gentleman's attention to line 5, and ask if his difficulty would not be overcome by inserting, after the word "supplies," at the end of line 5, the words "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908?" So that it would then read: "To defray expenses incident to the shipment of supplies during the fiscal year 1908, in accordance with."

Mr. MANN. I do not think that would meet it. The provision to which reference is made only applies to the three months' period immediately preceding the weighing of the mails, so that the limitation is that period, whereas as I understand the purpose of the Government it is to carry it after the weighing of the mails all the time.

Mr. PAYNE. And in order to get the benefit of that legislation after the 1st of July, the gentleman's idea is that there ought to be some provision extending the terms of that law passed in 1906 to the period following?

Mr. MANN. That is carried in the present bill in another place, but only with reference to the three months' period immediately preceding the weighing of the mails, and all it needs is an appropriation authorizing the payment of freight during the balance of the year, and I suppose that will be taken care of in the proper way when the gentleman has time to look it

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. For an explanation of this matter

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is speaking in the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STAFFORD. In explanation of the objection made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], I wish to say that I think his point is well taken. When we recommended this amendment last year for the first time, and as the bill left the House, there was contained in the bill the word "thereafter," immediately following "in said divisions and," which would make it obligatory upon the Department after these matters had been withdrawn from the mails during the weighing period to have them withdrawn permanently; but in examining the law of last year I find that the word "thereafter" has been left out. When the bill was submitted to the committee, naturally the words followed the existing act. If it were possible to return to the item as found on page 22, I believe that there should that to the tell as foliate on page 22, I believe that there should be inserted the word "thereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out the last two or three

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I want to suggest, as the gentleman well knows, that the committee only desired to make proper provision for this freight. I still think this language will make the proper provision, but it is probably more language than is needed, and I therefore suggest that we strike out all of lines 6 to 16, inclusive, and then it would leave the language "to defray expenses incident to the shipment of supplies, including hardware, boxing, package, cartage, and the pay of one carpenter and three laborers, for assignment in connection therewith, $100,000."

Mr. MANN. That would cover the whole case, Mr. STAFFORD. I hardly think that meets the objection that was made by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Indiana moves to strike that out?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, no; I have not made that motion as yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized as having the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that last year when we reported this item we had inserted the word "there-" but in the present law the word "thereafter" is left out. It was the intention of the committee that after these items were withdrawn from the mails during the weighing period they should be continued to be kept out, and I can not account for the omission of the word. Whether it was an oversight by the engrossing clerk or not; in any event the word "there-after," following the words "in said divisions and," was left

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I stated a while ago that it was in. I thought it was in.

Mr. STAFFORD. The law of last year left out the word thereafter," and it is not contained in the present bill; and I think we ought to revert to that item and insert the word.

Mr. MANN. What page?

Mr. STAFFORD. On page 22, line 18, after the words "in said divisions and," insert the word "thereafter," and that will correspond to the bill reported by the committee last year. ask unanimous consent to return to page 22 for the purpose of offering an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to recur to page 22 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to insert in the paragraph on page 22, line 18, after the words "said divisions and," the word "thereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 18, after the word "and," insert "thereafter;" so to read: "And thereafter such postal cards, stamped envelopes, etc.

Mr. MANN. That is for the next fiscal year, for the weighing of the next fiscal year, but the appropriation is to carry out the provisions of the current fiscal year. Why not-

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will kindly suspend a minute in order to perfect this, I will offer an amendment to the paragraph on page 31 that is now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The question has not yet been put on the previous amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. STAFFORD. Now I offer an amendment to the paragraph under consideration, on page 31, line 14, after the word "and," to insert the word "thereafter;" so as to conform with the change just made.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman please state his amendment?

Mr. MANN. May I invite the attention of the gentleman for a moment to this point, that he can not change a quotation by adding words to the law? Why not strike out lines 6 to 16, as the gentleman from Indiana suggests?

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw my amendment. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Page 31, strike out lines 6 to 16, both inclusive

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line, and I do this for the purpose of putting into the RECORD two letters from the Post-Office Department in reference to the pay of letter carriers. One of them is in reference to the pay of city letter carriers and the second letter is in reference to the pay of rural carriers. I desire to have these read for the information of the membership of the House in order that in the consideration of the amendment which will come before the House to fix the pay of rural letter carriers we may have this information in order that we may compare the pay of each class of letter carriers and do justice to the rural letter carriers by giving them at least $900 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters referred to were read, and are as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, February 18, 1907.

Washington, February 18, 1907.

House of Representatives.

Sir: In reply to your letter of the 15th instant, you are informed that carriers at all city delivery offices receive a salary of $600 for the first year they are employed. In cities with a population of 75,000 or over the salary for the second year is $800, and $1,000 thereafter. In cities with a population less than 75,000 carriers receive $850 after the completion of the first year's work.

Allowances paid to mounted carriers for maintenance of their equipments range from one hundred to three hundred dollars per annum, owing to the variation in cost of maintaining outfits in different sections of the centry. The maximum amount is usually paid to carriers in the larger cities.

Respectfully,

F. H. Hitchcock,

First Assistant Postmaster-General.

F. H. HITCHCOCK, First Assistant Postmaster-General.

OFFICE OF THE FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, February 14, 1907.

Hon. E. S. CANDLER, Jr., House of Representatives.

Sin: Replying to your letter of the 10th instant inquiring as to the classification of the salaries of rural carriers, I have to say that the maximum salary which can be paid under the law, $720 per annum, is allowed rural carriers serving routes of 24 or more miles, and the salaries of carriers on routes of less length are adjusted according to the scale given below, based upon the length of the routes, as follows:

		Per annun
24 miles	and over	$72
23 to 24	miles	70
22 to 23	miles	68
21 to 22		66
20 to 21
	miles
16 to 18
14 to 16
	4 miles
	2 miles
8 to 10	miles	43

While the mileage basis appears to be the most equitable one which to adjust the salaries of rural carriers, it is believed it would more satisfactory to make a difference in grades of 2 miles instead 1—that is, the maximum salary for routes of 24 or more miles ( miles being about the average route) and a proportionate rate for routes from 22 to 24 miles in length, and so on. In case the Congress increases the maximum compensation which can be allowed rural carriers, it is intended to consider this matter in connection with any readjustment which is made.

Very respectfully,

P. V. DE GRAW, Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. CANDLER. Now, in view of the facts shown in these letters I assert that the rural letter carriers are entitled to a substantial increase. The amendment I offered a few minutes ago provided for a salary of $900 and additional pay for carrying lock pouches and $100 for use of horse and vehicle. That is just and should be adopted. When the city carrier is allowed from $100 to $300 for horse and vehicle, certainly the rural free-delivery carrier ought to be allowed $100 for that purpose. It is also fair to allow to those rural free-delivery carriers who carry lock pouches extra pay for that extra service. "Uncle Sam" is too rich to work his citizens without paying them reasonable compensation for services actually performed. The Good Book says, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." The rural free-delivery carrier is a faithful, honest public servant. Let us do him at least partial justice by enacting into law the amendment I offered. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] will yet withdraw his point of order and let us have a vote. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, some time ago, at my request, a carrier in New York City furnished me the following itemized statement of the cost of living expenses for himself, wife, and three children. He lived on the fifth floor of a ten-family house, and spent the following amounts:

	Per month.	Per year.
Rent Gas Coal Le Insurance and dues. Wearing apparel (all kinds) Doctor and medicines Household expenses, furniture, and bedding. Food, meats, and groceries Additional expenses not included in foregoing	$21,00 3.50 3.00 1.00 9.00 10.00 3.00 2.00 30.00	$252.00 42.00 36.00 12.00 108.00 120.00 36.00 24.00 360.00
Total		1,000.00

The foregoing leaves no allowance for an extended sickness or loss of salary while sick. In the item of wearing apparel is included the cost of uniform, etc. Insurance is a recognized necessity to provide against death.

Recently an experienced charity visitor in New York made an estimate of the necessary expenses for a self-supporting family of a man, wife, and three children of school age, fixing the sum needed so that the family should remain permanently independent of any charitable assistance. The following is the esti-

	Rent, four rooms and bath, $18 per month Food (including ice), about $7 per week	$216 370

П	Margin for illness, dentistry, etc	50

The item of incidentals includes furniture, washing, sewing, etc. The foregoing is in excess of the present carrier's maxietc. The foregoing is in excess of the present carrier's maximum pay. The estimate agreed with the actual budget of a tailor, who had a wife and four children, two of whom were too young to go to school. The father died of heart failure, due to rheumatism, perhaps incurred by living in damp ground Within five months after his death the widow and children became dependent upon charity.

In the Eighteenth Annual Report of the Commissioner of Labor, published in 1903, the average expenditure of a family consisting of man, wife, and three-children the country over was estimated to be-

Lighting Clothing Sundries	6. 46 81, 09 117, 96

The percentages made for various purposes in such a family were estimated to be as follows:

In such families having an income between $900 and $1,000 the percentages for the various expenditures were estimated to be as follows:

	Per cent.
Rent Fuel Lighting Food Clothing Sundries	17. 58 3. 85 1. 11 39. 90 14. 35 23. 21
m-4-1	100 00

While there are discrepancies beween these amounts and percentages as compared with the carrier's cost of living, they show that his estimate is not unreasonable. The mere matter of rent shows the greater comparative cost of city living. It prevents the city man from spending for food, clothing, and sundries anything like the sum that the average man of family with the same income the country over can spend. The carrier in New York City can spend only 67 per cent of his $1,000 salary for those items, whereas the average man of family the country over can spend 77.46 per cent of his $1,000 on those items. This appears from the following comparative percentages:

Percentages of each expenditure for various classes of people.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, the points of order that have defeated the wise and necessary legislation contained in this bill for the increase of salaries of postal clerks, letter carriers, railroad clerks, and free-delivery carriers seems to me to be an abuse of power.

Under the rules of the House, intended for the protection of its Members, a single objection of any Representative will cut out all new legislation or change of existing law.

This rule is really dangerous to good, honest administration of the various Departments of Government, should there be captious men in the House.

The bill under consideration provides for a modest increase in the salaries of the classes named, a most deserving set of faithful public officials.

Too long has this meager recognition been denied these men, and now when the Committee on Post-Offices unanimously decide to make a small advance in compensation, an objection defeats the end accomplished after years of hard fighting on the part of the friends of the postal and mail clerks and letter carriers.

The maximum salaries of the city carriers and postal clerks should be $1,200, instead of $1,100, as proposed in this bill.

The rural carriers should have been made $900 yearly instead of $840, as proposed. This is what was contended for and what we will eventually secure.

I am in favor of an increase of salaries of all Government

I am in favor of an increase of salaries of all Government employees. As is well known, the cost of living has increased 30 per cent in the last five years, hence the necessity for an increased compensation all along the line.

We should insist upon a special rule to put back those sections carried out of the bill on the points of order. Common justice demands that this be done, and we will be satisfied with nothing less.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, as I was one of the first Members of this body to raise a voice in behalf of increased pay for rural carriers, and as I have at every opportune time since the beginning of my service in the House worked for and advocated the furtherance of this measure, I feel that there is little new that I can bring to bear on the subject.

In reading the reports of the Postmaster-General and of the Fourth Assistant, the recommendations suggested therein are so strikingly in line with my speech on the subject, made some three years ago, that I almost feel that I am making my old speech.

Though I may not bring new arguments to bear, may I not hope to better drive those arguments home with an experience of three years justifying every statement that I then made and with those statements recommended by the highest authority in the Government?

Let me say at the outset, that I have no special desire to push my individual bill if some other bill embodying the same general provisions stands a better chance of passage. My sole purpose is to obtain favorable results; to secure for our faithful carriers adequate pay for honest service.

Three years ago I suggested that the cost of the carrier's equipment was something like $350. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General makes the same statement. Then I called attention to the increase in mail received, due to the rural service. The Department directs attention to this same fact. Then I called attention to the lighter work and adequate pay of the city carrier, contrasting it with the well-nigh exhausting work of the rural carrier, who was working for a bare subsistence. The Department now directs attention to the same state of things. Then I emphasized the statement that the pay of rural carriers was inadequate, by citing the large number of resignations from the service. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General calls attention to the same, and his report shows that out of $6,782 carriers employed at this time, 3,094 resigned in six months. Nearly 10 per cent of the total number of men employed have resigned in six months. It is doubtful if the entire Government service combined will show more resignations for the same length of time.

Gentlemen, this speaks more eloquently of the hardships of the carrier's life and of his pitiful earnings than could the logic of Aristotle combined with the eloquence of Demosthenes. In the language of Macbeth, it should appeal to us "like angels, trumpet-tongued."

Bear in mind that the recommendations of the Postmaster-General and of his Fourth Assistant are not the effusions of the politician, but they are mature and deliberate conclusions, based on the closest scrutiny of the service, with every possible opportunity for observing the work in detail.

I fear that the rural service has suffered more or less from the experimental nature of the work in its infancy. The experimental stage, gentlemen, has long since been passed. The people have long since come to recognize it as the welding force uniting country and town. The city and the rural districts are interdependent, and yet before the inauguration of this service they were never before brought into immediate contact. Through this means a force is at work to dispel that dissatisfaction with country life that had well-nigh depopulated many rural sections.

Just here let me digress to say that the Department should not be too strict in discontinuing existing routes because of alleged lack of appreciation. There is not one farmer in a thousand who does not appreciate this recognition by the Government, and the very small per cent, if there are any, who do not appreciate the service place themselves in the ranks of those who prefer inconvenience to convenience, ignorance to intelligence. The approval or disapproval of such would amount to nothing for or against the system.

The service now has the heartiest indorsement of the Post-Office Department, and the Department is outspoken in its advocacy for increased pay. If the city resident, who is a consumer living upon his wits, has his mail delivered at his door, is not the rural resident, upon whose mental and physical labor all of us are dependent in a greater or less degree, entitled to like consideration? They are alike citizens of this Government. If the capstone of our prosperity is laid in the city, the foundation is laid in the country.

Taken as a whole, considering the increase of mail received due to the carrier system, it can be demonstrated that the rural service is almost if not quite self-sustaining. But this is the smallest view to take of it. If the Government can afford to spend millions in irrigating arid lands; if it can spend millions in improving rivers and harbors; if it can afford to spend millions in opening up a waterway between the two oceans, all to build up commerce and industry, surely it can afford to do something for those of its citizens who have coaxed from the soil its richest fruits, whose products in the markets of the world have made this a Titan in the galaxy of nations.

What if some remote rural sections, struggling with a sparse population and attendant difficulties, do not meet the requirements of the Department? Is it not the part of policy for the Government to make some little sacrifice to aid them in their struggle? Does the farseeing husbandman fertilize only the richer portions of his field and leave the poorer parts to become more barren year by year?

The indispensable advantages of the rural service in increased revenue to the Government and in conveniences brought to the citizen, whether in country or town, entitles the service to the same consideration that is accorded any other branch of public service. Where, then, is the excuse for discriminating against the faithful carrier? The present salary of the rural carrier, less the cost of keeping and maintaining an outfit, is about $400; the salary of the city carrier is about $1,000, averaged. This comparison holds good through every Department of the Government service; but what is the use to multiply illustrations? The fact is patent, and that the remedy has not been applied ere this is a shameful reflection upon our ideas of justice. Either the service is what we claim for it or it is a gigantic humbug. Can any Member who has had the hand touch of the people truthfully assert that the rural service has not given more widesoread satisfaction among the masses than any single law passed by this body in recent years? Then let us not temporize with this matter any longer.

To raise the pay of rural carriers to $900, as proposed in my bill three years ago and as proposed in my present bill, would require an additional appropriation of $4,500,000. The appropriation is warranted by the increased revenues to the Government; it is warranted by increased commercial intercourse; it is warranted because the service ranks with other indispensable public utilities. We can not afford, then, to cavil over so small an appropriation or to further delay the demands of justice, which have for so long fallen on deaf ears.

While I have been against the parcels-post system suggested by the Department, I am not sure but that the suggestion is a good one if the weight of parcels is limited to 5 pounds. Undoubtedly this would be a great accommodation, both to the merchant and to the rural resident; the service to be limited, of course, to the patrons of routes going out from a particular point. It would, in a measure, take the place of express companies which serve city residents. I believe, too, that the increased revenue from this source would in a short time cover the increased appropriation necessary to raise the salaries of carriers to $900. It is this that I want, and if we must have it coupled with parcels post or any other system not burdensome to the carriers, let it come along.

As I said at the outset, I did not hope to bring any argument to bear on this subject. Arguments are plentiful, but why present arguments to prove an axiom. All admit the justice of the proposed increase. The thirty-odd bills introduced in this body, coming from every section of the country, attest a desire for immediate action, and the fact that none of these bills suggest an amount less than $900 is in itself significant. It seems to me that this is a fair consensus of opinion as to what should be paid the carriers and to haggle it by piecemeal is like child's play. Let us grant the $900, and let us grant it to take effect at once. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two lines

strike out the last two lines.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely for the purpose of submitting to the House a communication received by myself from a rural carrier in my district. It is a fair statement of conditions applicable to rural carriers generally. propose to read it to the House and ask that it be inserted in the Record. After stating conservatively the expenses of his outfit and maintenance, and also the expense of maintaining a family of four—himself, wife, and two children—making it amount to the sum of $704.40, he says:

Take this from my yearly salary of $720 and see how much I have left to pay for waterproof coats, overshoes, buggy rugs, carriage heaters, carbon for same, doctor's bills, etc. * * * I am only holding on to this job because nothing better is showing itself at present and the hope that the Department will come to our relief. We who brave the snow and sleet of winter and the excessive heat of summer, and are relegating to past history the proverbial "backwoods;" we who travel enough each day to belt the globe more than thirty-five times are entitled to not only enough to pay our 'ccessary expenses, but to lay by something for the proverbial "rain' cay."

I have been impressed with the onlying that rugal cayriors.

I have been impressed with the opinion that rural carriers are one branch of the public service that is not being sufficiently compensated, and have taken occasion to make investigation as to the amount of expense that carriers are compelled to undergo.

When you consider the outlay and expense of purchasing an outfit and maintaining it, then it is demonstrated that they are inadequately paid, notwithstanding the fact that their duties force them to undergo exposure and hardships of the severest kind. In response to inquiries made by me, I have received statements of the necessary expenses that a number of carriers are put to. The extract I have read is from a letter from a carrier in my district, written in reply to questions from me as to his expense and cost of maintaining his outfit and cost of living, and without any idea on his part that it would be made public.

Now, this is a fair statement of the conditions that apply to all carriers.

Mr. Chairman, I favor an economical administration of all the Departments of this Government, but this is a branch of the public service that is entitled to better pay.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph: "That hereafter clerks in offices of the first and second class shall be divided into seven grades, as follows: First grade, saiary $600; second grade, salary $700; third grade, salary $800; fourth grade, salary $900; fifth grade, salary $1,000; sixth grade, salary $1,100; seventh grade, salary $1,200."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana (interrupting reading). Chairman, enough of the amendment proposed has been read to indicate that it is subject to a point of order, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman withhold for a moment until I explain why I introduced that?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The gentleman may move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will be recognized to strike out the last word.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I move to strike out the last word, but I preferred to be heard before the point of order was susting a superior of the strike out the last word. tained. The amendment includes two sections that have been stricken out, and I do not believe objection will be made again. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I prefer to take the entire subject up at one time, and not to show any discrimination. If we are going to advance the salaries of these employees, let us treat them all fairly.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. This includes both rural and city carriers

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

While the paragraph in this bill, providing for an increase of the salaries of rural free-delivery carriers, has been stricken out on a point of order and, under the circumstances, no increase can be hoped for in the House, yet I am satisfied that it is the deliberate judgment of every Member on this floor that the salary of all rural carriers should be increased from what it is under existing law. The remarks which I desire to offer will contain some statements relative to expenses of carriers in this service, which, in my judgment, furnish good reasons for the increase of salaries for this class of our Government employees.

When this bill goes to the other end of the Capitol, I sincerely hope they may insert an amendment providing a reasonable increase of salaries for the rural carriers of our country.

The maximum salary for rural carriers under existing law is

In the bill now under consideration, our Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads recommended that the maximum salary be increased to $840 per annum. Had this recommendation been adopted, same would have given some relief, but, in my opinion, would have fallen far short of the adequate salary to which this class of employees are justly entitled, considering the services which they have to perform and the hardships to which they are subjected.

Had not the point of order been raised, and by the Chair sustained, to the proposed increase of salaries of carriers provided for in this bill, it was my intention to offer, as suggested in my remarks under general debate, the following amendment:

On page 30, line 17, strike out the words "eight hundred and forty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand;" so that the paragraph will read:

"That on and after July 1, 1907, letter carriers of the rural delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,000 per annum."

Rural free delivery is now a permanent service and we must provide for same accordingly. I am in favor of providing a reasonable salary for every Government employee, as I am also in favor of a reasonable wage for every person who works for any corporation or individual. For this principle I have always stood and during the remainder of my life intend to advocate the same doctrine. I have never favored niggardly pay for any one, whether in the Government service or otherwise, nor do I believe the spirit of our country or the judgment of our people would sanction same.

A rural carrier, when he first enters the service, must provide himself with certain necessary equipment at approximately the following cost:

Team of horses	$200
Harness for same	30
Suitable wagon Uniform for self	75 25

Total original outlay 330

Deduct this from the maximum salary of $720 leaves the carrier for his first year's service the sum of $390. Out of this amount he must pay for the feed of his team while at home and on the road; he must pay for the shoeing of his horses, for the necessary repairs to his harness, wagon, and uniform which, at a very reasonable estimate, would be $250 per annum. Therefore deduct this $250 from the amount before stated, $390, and the carrier has the munificent sum of $140 left as his first year's salary.

While it is not the duty of Congress to provide unreasonable salaries for any Government employees, yet I insist that reasonable living salaries should be provided for all, and I am fully satisfied that the sound judgment of our people will heartily approve and commend the action of Congress in doing so.

Every State and Territory in this country now has rural free delivery. Probably there is not a Member of this House but has more or less of this service in his district. Each of us know the character of our young men engaged in this service. We know the expenses to which they are subjected and the hardships they have to undergo in the performance of their duties. It will not do to say that if a carrier is not satisfied with his job and the salary provided for him, let him resign, and that there are many others who would like to have his position. Such is not a business way to consider this matter. Let us look at it as sensible men and, presumably, intelligent legislators and act accordingly.

All of us know something of the hardships and exposures to which every carrier is subjected. No difference what the weather may be, nor what the conditions of the roads are, the rural carrier makes his daily round, breasting whatever storms may come, and always promptly and efficiently performing his duty. He is always welcomed by the man in the woods and on the farm. As they receive their mails at their own doors they feel they are not forgotten, but realize that this great Government looks after and provides for the welfare and convenience of not only the wealthy, but the poorest and humblest of its elitions.

If there is one thing in which I have taken more pride during my service as a Member of Congress than over all other acts I have performed, it is that long before this service was established I earnestly and persistently advocated same, and I am more than glad that I have lived to see this service, which, when I first advocated it, was regarded by many as a wild and visionary scheme, impossible of being carried into effect, ripen into a permanent branch of our Government.

And while the committee has declined to increase the salaries of rural carriers, as recommended by the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads, I trust we may secure such relief in the Senate, and should we secure same there, that every Member may assist in sustaining it before the committee of conference and in this House. [Prolonged applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The Postmaster-General shall cause a record to be kept from July 1 to December 31, 1907, inclusive, of the weight in pounds, respectively, of first-class, second-class, free, paid-at-the-pound rate, and transient, third-class, and fourth-class matter and all franked and penalty matter and the equipment carried in connection therewith.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the gentleman would prefer to have this paragraph and the next considered together or not.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It is all of one part.

Mr. MANN. Whether they could be separated if the first went out, and the second could be perfected easily so as to provide for the first. The first paragraph provides for a six months' period, which, it seems to me, with due deference to my friend, would be a very expensive proposition. As to the provisions of the paragraph which has not been read, for obtaining certain data for thirty days and seven days, there may be very great justification, but it seems to me it would be very expensive and very annoying for the actual service, at least in the large cities, to endeavor to carry out the provisions of the first paragraph.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it was found in the investigation made by the Postal Commission authorized at the last session of Congress that the Government was woefully deficient in accurate information relative to the various statistics to which the Government is entitled with reference to the mail service. There is no data that has much credit to it upon which you can base any opinion at all as to the weight of the various classes of mail, their relative proportion to the distances hauled, or anything else that ought to make up the various elements or factors in determining the cost to the Government. These several provisions that are now before the committee are for the purpose of ascertaining as complete and as nearly an accurate statement of facts as can be secured. Therefore recommendation is made for a weighing for the period of six months, generally, of all mail, in order that we can have the accurate statistics relative to weight, and then a weighing for thirty days during that period of six months from certain specified offices in order to ascertain the average haul of the various classes of mail from those specified offices, and, during that period, for seven days with each separate class of mail a counting of each separate piece and an estimate of the receipts by classes.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, this will involve considerable expense. Three hundred thousand dollars is recommended by the provision to cover that expense. But in an annual expenditure of the postal service, aggregating $200,000,000, $300,000 in one or two generations is not an extravagance when it is applied to the compilation of accurate statistics.

We tried six months' weighing for a period ending December 31 last of second-class matter alone. It was found that much information was secured by that weighing. There were no statistics available showing separately the elements of the second-class matter of mail, nor the average haul of those various elements. There was not any available information of what the difference was in respect to the handling and carriage of the daily newspapers and the monthly periodicals. How much more important is it, Mr. Chairman, that we should have statistics showing the relative proportion of the various classes of mail, the relative haul from the main post-offices of the country at which the largest proportion of the mail is entered of the different classes of mail, and the other statistics which are to be obtained by this provision.

We have not reasonable statistics for estimates for the coming year, and without these statistics there is a woeful absence of a proper distribution of the cost of the service; and it is felt, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that while there may be differences of opinion concerning the charges upon the different classes of mail, and there may be a variety of convictions as to what should be entitled to the mail, yet there should be no difference of view with respect to modern business methods of applying the different elements of cost to the various characters of service. But you can not ascertain these elements of cost in the absence of accurate statistics; and this provision and the several paragraphs following are for the purpose entirely of putting into the possession of the Government for the information of Congress this information upon which it can be able to base some sensible and reasonable estimates and to assign and locate some of the elements of cost for the various characters of service rendered. I believe that a closer study of the recommendation will bring each individual Member to the same conclusion; and I trust that there may be no disposition to avoid a compilation of this valuable information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the chairman of the Post-Office Committee relative to the ignorance which now prevails as to the weighing that is carried on in post-office matters by the railroads of this country is also equally applicable to the carriers of both city and country as to the amount of work that they do and the details of their work, on which their salaries and their promotions should be based.

I have in my possession, however, detailed information, which has been collated in the New England States, bearing upon this subject, but collated too late to submit to the Post-Office Committee when this bill was being formulated. In fact, these statistics have not yet been submitted to the Department itself.

Now, the postmasters of New England, not for the purpose of controlling or raising their own salaries, but for the purpose of ascertaining what would be a fair and just salary for the clerks—those in the cities and those in the country in those States—made an investigation of all the work done by the carriers, both in the cities and in the towns. By city carriers I mean carriers in towns where the population is 75,000 and over, and by country carriers I mean carriers who are engaged in offices where the receipts are under $50,000. Now, there are in New England 139 of these post-offices, of which 11 are in cities of 75,000 or over, where the carriers receive a maximum salary of $1,000 per annum. There are . 123 offices in cities of less than 75,000 population, where the maximum salary is $850 per annum. In the week ending December 8, 1906, in 9 of the offices out of 11 where the population was 75,000 or over this computation was made, and in 83 of the 123 offices where the receipts of the office were $50,000 or under a like computation In the 9 offices to which I first referred, 10 carriers was made. were selected as a fair average of what the whole work would be. In the 83 offices to which I referred every one of the carriers made a detailed report of all the work they did. I desire to submit to the committee the result of that, as it is of the utmost importance in determining what is fair and just in the readjustment of this entire matter.

Now, then, they inquired first as to the weight which each one of the carriers took around with him every day. They inquired, in the second place, into the number of persons these post-office pieces were delivered to. They inquired, in the third place, the length of the route that each one of the carriers went. They inquired, in the fourth place, the condition of the sidewalk, street, and post-office boxes; and they inquired, in the fifth place, in relation to the domestic expenses which the carriers were under.

In the nine city offices I have referred to, five used ten carriers in this test, one used nine carriers, one used twenty carriers, and in Providence, R. I., and New Bedford, Mass., the mail was weighed by the entire force.

Now, I want to call your attention to the result of this, as I think it is very startling and surprising. At least it was to me.

First, in regard to the weight which the carriers in the city and country post-offices deliver: We find that the weight carried by the city carriers, who receive a maximum salary of $1,000 per annum, was 78.06 pounds per day, which they delivered daily. They delivered to 1,650 people. They traveled 10.67 miles.

Now, we will take the country carriers and see what work they did on the same days.

[The time of Mr. Tirrell having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. Alexander, it was extended five minutes.1

Mr. TIRRELL. The carriers receiving $850 as a maximum salary delivered 66.32 pounds, slightly less in weight than the amount delivered by the city carriers, but they delivered to 1,735 people, or 85 more people than the city carriers deliver to. They traveled a distance of 2.83 miles more each day than the city carriers—that is, those carriers who are receiving a maximum of $850 a year, while they carried somewhat less in weight—not very much less, but some—delivered to more people, and they traveled nearly 3 miles a day more than the districts traveled by the city carriers.

Not only that, but of course the condition of the sidewalks and the streets in these country towns is much worse than in the larger cities. Then there must be taken into consideration the fact that they have to run up steps and ring bells and open doors, all adding to their work, and establishing the fact that the country carrier in the offices where the maximum pay is $850 does more work and harder work and works for the same length of time as the city carrier who receives the larger compensation.

Mr. SOUTHARD. How many people did they deliver to each

Mr. TIRRELL. Over 1,700.

Mr. SOUTHARD. On the average?
Mr. TIRRELL. Yes.
Mr. SOUTHARD. That can not be, can it?
Mr. TIRRELL. Yes; that is the report.
Mr. SOUTHARD. Their routes are established on the basis of 100 families. There could scarcely be 17 persons in each TIRRELL. This is the official report. The gentleman must remember we are not speaking of the rural free-delivery carriers, where 100 families are requisite to establish a route, but of free-delivery carriers.

Now, there is another matter which is a more convincing argument than the one which I have submitted. Taking the largest cities in New England, outside of the cities of Boston and Worcester, we have the following statistics as to the amount of work done each week by these carriers. Take the city of Providence, which has a population of 212,000; the average weight which they carried was 62.33 pounds per day. In

New Bedford, with a population of 78,000, they carried 64.25 pounds per day. The other cities I will tabulate for conven-

	Number of pounds.	Population.
Portland, Me Holyoke, Mass Lawrence, Mass Salem, Mass Waterbury, Conn Newton, Mass. Pawtucket, R. I	65.00 66.54	60,000 52,000 70,000 38,500 67,000 40,000 43,391

The average in Providence, R. I., and New Bedford is 63.30 pounds per day, and the seven remaining offices 63.66, or 0.36 pound more, so that, taking these large cities, even the average weight is 2.66 pounds per day less than the weight carried by the country carriers, although, taking all the cities of New England, the weight is slightly in excess of the amount carried by the country carriers.

Now, I submit these facts for the consideration of the committee, and I shall extend my remarks in the RECORD, giving them more in detail, as I have not the time to give them here.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If I understand my colleague correctly, the carriers in the small cities do just as much work or more work than the carriers in the city of New York, do they not?

Mr. TIRRELL. Substantially the same.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And the cost of living in the smaller cities and large towns of my State is as great as in the city of New York, is it not, except in the matter of rent?

Mr. TIRRELL. It is more in these small towns than it is in the city of Boston-I am not conversant with the New York situation—as I can demonstrate if I have the time. In the country towns of Massachusetts it is more than it is in the city of Boston.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And yet the maximum salary attainable in this bill in a small city or in a large town is $200 less than the amount carried for the carriers in the city of Boston. The carriers in the city of Lynn, for instance, would get $1,100, and in the city of Beverly only $900. Now, is there any justice in that inequality? Mr. TIRRELL. That is no justice, and the postmasters of New England, who have no interest in this matter as far as their own salaries are concerned, who have investigated this subject for the purpose of having justice done to their carriers and their clerks, have demonstrated it by irrefutable evidence, contained in these statistics which I have given. If it is contended that it costs the city earrier more to live than the country carrier, I admit that as to rent this is true, as the data upon this item was obtained in the examination where it was found that the city carrier paid on the average $3.38 more per month, or about $40 per year. But this is more than offset by less prices for other necessities, for the city carrier has the advantage of department and cut-price stores where almost every-thing indispensable in the family can be purchased at lower prices, and in many cases at a great reduction, so that, take it all in all, in these particulars he is better off.

Again, as to the clerks in these offices whose salaries and promotions are based on a similar scale there is about the same disparity-clerks employed in offices where the population is less than 75,000 in New England receive an average salary of $794.40 per annum, and those employed in cities whose population is 75,000 or more receive an average salary of $881.29 per annum. But the clerks in the smaller offices are employed on the average nine hours and twelve minutes a day, or forty-five minutes longer than in the larger offices. In some of the smaller offices the day is even longer, running up to eleven and twelve onces the day is even longer, running up to eleven and twelve hours a day. I presume the same ratio prevails in other sections of the country, for the same conditions substantially exist in connection with the same grade of office and the work is so arranged that under the rules but little differences would result. Therefore it seems unfair that clerks in second-class offices shall not receive more than $1,000 unless unusual conditions. tions prevail, and still more unfair that in offices where the receipts may be considerably under $50,000 per annum $900 should be the limit. Any readjustment should treat all without prejudice. Longer days and less salary is an anomalous arrangement, militating harshly against the country clerks. will not meet the approbation of the country. Inadequate as salaries may now be, greater satisfaction would ensue even if salaries were reduced if all were treated alike in every grade where substantially the same amount of work and time are given. Neither population nor receipts are a just basis on which to make a permanent law. Equal pay for the same or equal work is the just method to treat a public service, for the ancient maxim that has come down to us from the days of Virgil is still true, and the only maxim by which a republic should treat its servants, "Trojan and Tyrian shall be treated by us without discrimination.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. Chairman, there is a point of order pending. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first dispose of the point of order. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Will the Chair hear me a moment?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.
Inclined to rule with the gentleman from Illinois.
Mr. MANN. I understand. The Chair is

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I think if the gentleman from Illinois may be heard, he will not insist on the point of order, and I hope he will not insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he is thoroughly satisfied that the provision in the bill for the appropriation will provide sufficient funds for the carrying on the postal business if this item remains in the bill? This particular item covers, first, the weighing in different classes of one of each of the four different classes of mail and free matter, and in addition the frank and penalty matter, as well as the equipment. Each of these will require a considerable force in all of the large post-offices, and some force, of course, in all of the small ones. In addition to that there is a specific requirement for the seven days or for the thirty days, and it does not seem to me that $300,000 or $3,000,000 will cover the But if the gentleman from Indiana is willing to assure us that, in his opinion, ample provision is made in the bill so that the postal service itself will not be interfered with, and so that if the amount is not sufficient we have just grounds next fall for going before the Committee on Appropriations for a deficiency, I am willing to withdraw the point of order. objection to obtaining the information, but I decidedly object to crippling the postal service in the way it has been crippled for a number of years in the past when similar efforts of the same sort were undertaken.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois I will say that when the amount which was thought to be necessary to cover this expense was under consideration, inquiry was made of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General to ascertain what would be the proper sum. Inasmuch as the weighing of the mail each year in some sections of the country is under the jurisdiction of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, he ought to be, and doubtless is, better advised than any other individual relative to the cost. He stated that he thought not in excess of $250,000 would cover these expenses without interference with the regular and proper administration of the postal service.

Out of abundant caution, in order that there might not be any interference with the proper administration of the service, the committee has recommended $300,000—more than was estimated by the Department. I certainly would share with the gentleman from Illinois any criticism that would operate by reason of this or any other provision to the impairment of the service. It is believed, however, that this compilation is in the interest of better service in the future, and the expenditure is a very light expenditure in view of the value of that informa-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to close debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The motion was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For thirty days during such period he shall require a record to be kept of the weight of each of the classes above specified dispatched from such post-offices as he shall determine to be representative for the purpose and have computed thereon, in the most practicable way, the average haul of the mail of the different classes and subclasses as hereinbefore set out. For seven days during such period he shall cause a record to be kept of the revenue received from each of the classes and subclasses of mail matter hereinbefore specified and a count of the number of pieces of each class and subclass, showing also for the first class the number of letters, postal cards, and other matter separately, and for thirty consecutive days during such period he shall cause a record to be kept for the purpose of ascertaining the average load of railway post-office cars other than storage cars, the average load of storage cars, and the average load in compartment cars.

Mr. HIMPHREY of Washington, Mr. Chairman, I move to

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I trust that the increase for the rural free-delivery carriers will be kept in the bill when the rule is reported to the House. I wish to state that it is not only justice to the carriers but is the saving of the system. On the Pacific slope several routes have had to be discontinued on account of insufficient pay. Several have been discontinued in western Washington within the last two months, it being impossible to get anyone to perform the service for the pay now given. In several instances, in order to keep the routes from being discontinued, the patrons have subscribed a sufficient amount to make it possible for the carriers to continue the work. I ask leave to insert an editorial upon the subject from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, one of the leading papers of the Northwest, in its issue of Sunday, February 3, 1907.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to insert the editorial referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The editorial is as follows:

R. F. D. CARRIERS' PAY.

R. F. D. CARRIERS' PAY.

The day is long since past when it was necessary to argue the reasons for establishing the rural free-delivery service. Its effectiveness and efficiency have never been disputed. That it has proved to be the most valuable means to that most desirable end, keeping the farmer's boys on the farm, lightening the labors of the farmer's wife, adding to the farmer's comfort and happiness, increasing the attractiveness of the country as opposed to the attractions of the congested urban districts, has been proved time and again and is beyond dispute.

In the last annual report of Postmaster-General Cortelyou he recommends an increase in the rural carriers' pay. He asserts that the service increased the bulk of first-class mail, also of second-class mail. He showed that during the past year rural carriers resigned at the rate of 370 a month, and that since June 30, 1906, this rate has materially increased. The reason he ascribes is the increased cost of providing and maintaining conveyances necessary for the carrier. The Postmaster-General asserts that a conservative estimate of the cost of a suitable conveyance is $300 per annum, leaving a carrier, who receives the maximum salary and whose duties require an entire working day, an average of but $1.25 to $1.35 per day for his labor.

Ten years ago the services of rural free-delivery carriers were fixed at $150 per annum. Within a year it was necessary to increase it to as much as $400. Six years ago the salary was increased to $500. In 1902 it was provided that their salaries should not exceed $600 per annum, and two years ago the maximum compensation was fixed at $720 per annum, and carriers were required to confine their occupation strictly to carrying within the hours of service.

The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General in his report urged that the salaries be raised to $900 at least. To carry the recommendation of the Postmaster-General and the Fourth Assistant into effect, Congressman Humphrey introduced the bill fixing the salary at $900 and allowing $150 for maintenance. Congress should not hesitate to enact a law at this session before adjournment, whether it be the Humphrey bill or another, which shall provide adequate compensation for this most necessary, most arduous, and most underpaid of Government employments. If it should fail to do so there is considerable reason to believe that the failure of Congress to act would bring down on the heads of Congressmen not only merited denunciation, but punishment. The rural free-delivery service is one of the most valuable agencies for civilization and progress yet established by the Federal Government. It is approved by the people; it meets opposition only from a few limited, special, corporate interests. The people demand the service, yet without adequate payment for the carriers the service can not be had. It is up to Congress to remedy the defect.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the item

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the item proposing an increase of pay to the rural carriers that has been stricken out of this bill upon a point of order will be restored before its final passage.

I am opposed to extravagance of every kind. I protest against the flood of wasteful extravagance that is sweeping over every part of this Government. Less than twenty years ago this country was appalled when it realized that the expenses of this Government for two years had reached the enormous total of $1,000,000,000.

Now, at this session of Congress, a short session of only three months, appropriations are being piled up until they will amount to $1,000,000,000 almost for the maintenance of the Government for only one year.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not consider it extravagance to give the rural carriers a reasonable increase of pay. It is but justice to them and justice to the people whom they serve. The carrier who delivers the mail in a city or town, who does not suffer the exposure to which the rural carrier is subjected, and who is not compelled to provide and maintain two or three horses and a wagon receives on an average much more than the rural carrier.

The rural service has become a necessity for our people and is serving as a great educator. It brings the people of the town and country into closer touch, making their relations more cordial, and giving each a better understanding of the other. It carries more and better literature into the remote homes of the country, making them more attractive and happing. It beings every man lets It brings every man into more intimate relations with the balance of the world, stimulating his intelligence and broadening his information. It brings to the farmer and stock raiser the daily paper fresh from the press with the news of the great world and its markets.

The rural carrier is the evangelist who delivers to the rural population these great blessings. Under present conditions the maximum pay allowed him is $720. It is not enough. It should be at least the amount of $840 originally contained in this bill. I do not believe $900 would be too much. He is compelled to provide himself with an outfit that is costly to procure and expensive to maintain. The Department estimates that the average annual cost to the carrier is not less than $300 to $340 per year, leaving him at present from $380 to $420 per year for his own services

No one doubts that he has to endure great hardships. compelled to go without regard to weather or roads. The midday sun of summer may beat down upon the dusty roads, but the carrier must patiently go his way. The clouds may pour out their torrential rains, but he can not stop. The awful cold of winter may drive all others to their firesides for warmth and comfort, but he must face the blast.

He is one of the heroes of peace, and I would reward him with an increase of salary in recognition of his splendid service at present and as an encouragement to even better service in the future

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

The motion was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

That there shall be appointed a joint commission of Congress, consisting of three Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, whose duty it shall be to make an investigation into the entire business system of the Post-Office Department and the postal service, including the methods of accounting and expenditure in force in such Department and service, with a view to determining what changes or improvements should be instituted in the organization and conduct thereof, and whether a system may not be devised for dealing with the revenues and expenditures of the Post-Office Department and the postal service so that the operating expenses thereof may be separated and assigned to the various classes of mail matter transported by that service in such manner as to show the true cost of the transportation, handling, and delivery of each class of mail matter and of the various subdivisions of such classes, as well as the true cost of each of the special services rendered the Government and the public by the postal service.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph. It is new legislation and clearly out of order on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say that in the interests of the proper administration of the postal service it is believed by all who have given it any consideration at all that we ought to have some expert professional service rendered in trying to find out the best business methods that can be applied to the service. It is impossible to apply that can be applied to the service. It is impossible to apply these proper methods unless some commission or committee devotes sufficient time and energy to the investigation. This recommendation is undoubtedly new law. It is subject to a point of order. It is placed in the bill, however, Mr. Chairman, in the hope that Congress may obtain at the next session of Congress the recommendations of some of the best professional experts in the country as to the proper methods to apply in the postal service, with a view to economy and the benefit of the service generally.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY. Did not we have a postal commission last

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That was with reference entirely to second-class matter. The result of that inquiry is one of the reasons for this recommendation-for the purpose of going into the entire subject of the Post-Office Department,

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri insist upon his point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford].

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Missouri does not reserve his point of order. He makes the point of order.

Yes; I make the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the chairman of the committee had the floor and was addressing the Chair, and I asked the gentleman whether he would yield.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Missouri has since then indicated to the Chair that he desires a ruling.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order.
Mr. MURPHY. I will reserve the point of order.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It is entirely in the interest of good government, and I do not think the gentleman intends Mr. STAFFORD. From the nature of the inquiry to be made by this commission, would it be a desirable berth for any Senator or Representative to seek appointment on this commission?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. By no means. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Murphy], if he has an idea that this is offered in the interest of some personal advantage. I hope nobody will consider my name in connection with that work. Somebody must do the work or else we will never reach any proper business methods in this service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman has stated very clearly that the whole committee believes that the public service requires this, and the gentleman has also intimated that it is subject to a point of order. Will the gentleman tell the committee why the Post-Office Committee has not reported such a matter in a separate bill?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. On account of the limited time of the session. It was impossible for this committee to take care of all of the work before it and make its recommendation in an independent measure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why didn't the committee report at the last session?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, it was not under consideration; it was embodied in the post-office appropriation bill at the last session of Congress for a commission to investigate second-class matter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will guarantee that there will not be a single vote against the bill if the gentleman will bring in a separate measure. It ought to be done. Mr. HARDWICK. What has become of the report of the present Postal Commission?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The report was made to Congress and referred to the Post-Office Committee. The evidence has been printed, but on account of the amount of work before that committee and the limited time of the session it has not been taken up.

Mr. HARDWICK. Just one further question. Now, is it the proposition of the committee at the next session of Congress to take up that report and dispose of its recommendations as to second-class mail matter?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That is a matter that has not been considered. It is entirely within the province of the committee, but the gentleman will understand that the next session of Congress will be a new Congress, and it may be an entirely new committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, that may be true as a matter of fiction, but as a matter of fact I expect the committee will be pretty much the same.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I meant that no arrangement could possibly be made.

Mr. HARDWICK. I meant to ask if it was the intention of the gentleman to do that?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That is all I have to say, and I will be glad to have the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

Moonl recognized.

Moon recognized.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to speak on the point of order, because it is evidently well taken, but rather to appeal to the good judgment of my friend from Missouri who makes the point of order, and if possible show him some reasons why the point of order should not be made now, in the interests of good government. This is unquestionable the good to be appeared to the Covernment the most over the covernment. ably the greatest Department of the Government, the most expensive Department of the Government, although it bears largely its own expense. Only ten years ago, Mr. Chairman, the post-office appropriation bill carried eighty-nine millions of money, and to-day that bill carries two hundred and nine millions of money, more than double in a decade. We have seen about 40,000 officers added to the service of that Department in ten years past. The postal service has spread into every part of the United States, and its foreign mails reach every civilized government in the world. Yet the business methods of the Post-Office Department are antiquated. We will yet see under the present conditions, if there be no change there, an increase in this bill in another decade to probably three hundred millions of money, when a proper and businesslike administration of this branch of the Government, having a monopoly of carrying the mails, ought to produce an annual revenue of $25,000,000 surplus. Now, let me ask the gentleman from Missouri, or any other gentleman upon this floor, how it is possible for this Department to succeed as a business institution, although it be a monopoly, with the present manner of transacting business? Who can tell the true cost of the transportation of the mails of the United States? We know what we pay, but not what we should pay. Who can tell the cost of first-class matter in transportation or handling or delivery

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. MURPHY. I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say nothing further if the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas desires to renew the point of order. The Chair will recognize him for that purpose, and the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Arkansas reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. MACON. I will be delighted to do so.

Mr. MACON. I will be dell Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hope my friend from Arkansas will not put himself in the unenviable position of destroying the best interests of the people and the postal revenues of the Government of the United States. I was proceeding to say when the gentleman from Missouri withdrew the point of order that it is impossible under the present system in vogue for the Post-Office officials to tell the cost of transportation, the true cost of transportation, the true cost of handling, or the true cost of delivering of any of the four classes of mail

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. SOUTHARD. This provision appoints three Senators and three Representatives?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes, sir.
Mr. SOUTHARD. Would it not be better if it appointed some one who had experience in the conduct of post-office

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will answer that inquiry in the course of the remarks I shall make in a moment.

Mr. Chairman, I assert that the Postmaster-General himself can not tell, nor can any man in his office, or any Senator or any Representative in the United States inform us within $10,000,000 the legitimate cost of the transportation of the mails The Postmaster-General has been before in the United States. the committee, and he has confessed his inability to give us information on this point. His Department confesses inability to tell us the relative weight of the mails and the cost of transportation. It is impossible to correctly ascertain the annual weight of mail under our system. What a chaotic condition it must be in any business concern, particularly a concern engaged in the transportation, handling, and delivery of mails, when you can not approximate by any system of bookkeeping we now have, or any method of computation, the cost of carrying mail, the correct weight of mail, and what the cost of the administration ought to be.

Now, to answer the question propounded to me by the gentleman, it is not assumed that the three Senators and the three Representatives, without experience in this matter, can of themselves determine the proper policy without proof. sion, among other provisions, is that there shall be appointed three expert accountants, who shall, with other officials, over-haul the Department and suggest the economies that ought to be practiced in it. The commission is but a tribunal to hear the proofs and reports and professional suggestions, then state their conclusions, and submit their judgment to the House on the questions involved.

There are no checks in that Department of sufficient character in one division against another. There are not divisions in that Department for the proper transaction of business in determining the essential facts that ought to be known in estimating costs. Can it be possible that this Department—with the law in the condition that it is in, changing from year to year, new statutes passed without relation to the old ones—can determine correctly its power and jurisdiction on the many complex and confusing questions submitted to its decision? The question of authority of the various officials of the Department is one that is questioned not only by the people, but by the courts and by this body. There never was such chaos, there never was such confusion in any Department of Government as in the Post-Office Department of the United States. It has only been a year or so, Mr. Chairman, since the people of this country were humiliated on account of the frauds found and practiced in that Department—things that would have been impossible under proper, methodical, scientific, and modern businesslike methods in that office. There must be ultimately some one connected with the Post-Office Department who has possession of all the facts and of the law, and who can take one broad, comprehensive mental grasp of the whole situ-ation, before there can be good results in the administration of that Department. A commission can adopt, after exhaustive hearings, a wise, economical, and judicious plan of postal administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In view of this situation, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the Department itself confesses to these conditions before the committee, and in view of the fact that the Department and the committee recommends this legislation, it would be very unwise, in my judgment, on the part of any man in this House to obstruct the progress of this Government and prevent for one moment the consummation of a plan or system that would protect the revenues of the people of the United States. I believe the gentleman, i. making the point of order, certainly was inconsiderate. I think the genof the United States. theman, in making the point of order, certainly did not understand the situation in this Department. He is a just man. He is an honorable man, and he is devoted to the interests of the country. He can make nothing for himself nor for his constituents by the interposition of a technical objection which will for a long period destroy the best interests of the Government he is sworn to protect. I ask him to withdraw the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I want to explain my position on this question once and for all. I have tried to be consistent in the matter of opposing all office-creating and salary-raising legislation upon appropriation bills. The provision that I object to in this part of the bill is found in this paragraph which proposes to create a lot of new officers, and that was why I made the point of order against the first paragraph, because the whole proposition is to be taken together. I will read the paragraph:

Such Commission is authorized to employ experts-

The gentleman from Tennessee said "accountants." This says "experts"-does not limit the number-says "experts"—does not limit the number—including statisticians, accoratants, auditors, and persons experienced in traffic management, to aid in the work of inquiry and examination; also to employ a secretary, disbursing officer, clerks, stenographers, and such other assistance as may be necessary, said experts, secretary, clerks, and employees to be paid such compensation as the said commission may deem just and reasonable.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow me to interrupt him for a moment? When I said accountants, speaking in a general way, I had reference not only to them but to the whole bill, covering all the employees mentioned and necessary to the work of the Commission. The gentleman will recollect that this is an immense undertaking. These tleman will recollect that this is an immense undertaking. officials are absolutely necessary to a proper comprehension of the situation and to aid the Commission in reaching a proper conclusion.

Mr. MACON. If the gentleman from Tennessee says that he has made

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman must remember that this is a subject involving more that $200,000,000 of the people's money.

Mr. MACON. If the gentleman from Tennessee will saybelieve he did say-that he has investigated this matter thoroughly as a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and that in his judgment all the officers, clerks, and so forth, set forth in this paragraph are actually needed in order to carry out the project that is contemplated, and that the project itself is vitally necessary to the proper conduct of the post-office business, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that my recent experience as a member of the Postal Commission looking into second-class mail matter, which is a very limited matter of consideration compared to the questions involved here, justifies me in saying that the enormous proportions of this work are such that not only those that are here mentioned will be needed to put this Government into a more methodical and economical way of transacting its business in this great Department, but possibly greater expense may be en-

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I still insist that it is improper to legislate upon appropriation bills in a general way. notice that in doing it we never have any legislation of that kind for the benefit of the agriculturists of the country. Only the other day, when the agricultural appropriation bill was before this House, I offered an amendment to that bill to put a stop to dealing in futures in agricultural products, but that went out on a point of order very promptly, gentlemen not being willing to allow the farmers to even control the price of their own products. And, sir, not a single Member of the House came to my aid in my efforts against the point of order made against it. No; not one.

In the same bill, when we reached a provision making an appropriation for the purpose of investigating and exterminating, if possible, the boll weevil that is preying upon the cotton product of the South, a point of order was promptly made against it by Mr. Fitzgerald, of New York, and none of the gentlemen were heard to complain of his act; and when the paragraph making an appropriation for the extermination of the gypsy moth that infests the whole of New England was reached it shared the same fate. These provisions were in the interests of the agriculturists, the producers, the bread makers, and the breadwinners of the country; but gentlemen could not afford to allow them to become law, because they would better the conditions of the real supporters of the world.

No, no; Mr. Chairman, the farmers can not be legislated for in this House upon appropriation bills, but almost every other interest can. I deplore the condition more than I can express, and I earnestly protest against its continuance.

Mr. Chairman, I now withdraw the point of order. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Such commission is authorized to employ experts, including statisticians, accountants, auditors, and persons experienced in traffic management, to aid in the work of inquiry and examination; also to employ a secretary, disbursing officer, clerks, stenographers, and such other assistance as may be necessary, said experts, secretary, clerks, and employees to be paid such compensation as the said commission may deem just and reasonable. The Postmaster-General shall detail from time to time such officers and employees as may be requested by said commission in its investigation.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

line 24, strike out "experts" and insert "expert professional service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 3, page 34, the word "disbursing;" and in line 4, the word "officer."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 34, in lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "disbursing officer."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I hope that that will not be I can explain in a moment. Here is a provision for an expenditure of money following an investigation to be controlled by three Senators and three Representatives. Of course that money is to be handled by some proper disbursing officer. You can hardly expect one of the members of the commission, in addition to his other duties, which he must properly perform without any charge whatever, to undertake the disbursement, the keeping of books, and the management of the fund. It is in the interest of the proper management and disbursement of that I think my colleague would not expect, if he were to be appointed a member of the commission, as I would be very glad if he would be, that he should be required personally to care for that fund and see to the pay roll and look after the dis-bursements. A disbursing officer is always provided for a commission; he gives bond and has the handling of the money, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. CROMER. There was no disbursing officer for the commission that was created last year.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; none was authorized, but we got the disbursing officer of the Senate to act for the commission without pay.

Mr. CROMER. Why could not an officer of the Department disburse the money for the commission?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. He would have to be withdrawn from the work of the Department.

What-to disburse $75,000 for a period of Mr. CROMER.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Some men can disburse that money in less time, but we want it disbursed properly.

Mr. CROMER. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this is a useless expenditure of this amount.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Said commission is authorized to send for persons, books, papers, and documents, and, through its chairman or acting chairman or the chairman of any subcommittee thereof, to administer oaths and to examine witnesses and books, papers, and documents respecting all matters pertaining to the duties of said commission and to sit during the recess of Congress. Said commission shall, as soon as practicable after the beginning of the first session of the Sixtieth Congress, report to Congress such conclusions, recommendations, and plans as said commission may see proper to make by bill or otherwise. The sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of the said commission, which audit and order shall be conclusive and binding upon all Departments as to the correctness of the accounts of such commission. Said appropriation shall be immediately available.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will reserve his point of order. This is a part of the entire scheme.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Oh, yes; I know that; the gentleman need not tell me that. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. This paragraph is subject to a point of order. I hope the gentleman from Ohio heard all the arguments and persuasions which were addressed to the gentleman from Arkansas in a perfectly proper manner.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes; I think I heard it. The gentleman from Indiana can not affect me or my action by any reference to the action of the gentleman from Arkansas; I want the gentleman to understand that distinctly.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If this paragraph goes out all the other provisions ought to go out.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am aware of that. I want the committee to understand why I have reserved this point of order. I do not believe this legislation amounts to anything. I do not believe that this investigation will amount to anything. I think anybody who has ordinary judgment and discretion would say that if you are going to investigate a business of this kind you should appoint somebody to do it who knows something about it to start with. Now, we have stricken out of the previous paragraph the only part of it that amounted to anything.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. What is that?

Mr. SOUTHARD. You have stricken out the word "expert."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, no; we have made it "expert and professional service." I will say to the gentleman, if he will permit an interruption, that the plan would be to let this commission, composed of three members of the Senate and three of the House, to act as the agents of Congress and to select men who are professional experts and who have had experience to assist in the matter.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Again, at the bottom of page 33, it says "such commission is authorized to employ experts, including statisticians, accountants, auditors, and persons experienced in traffic management to aid in the work of inquiry in examina-I suppose the purpose is to hold a lot of meetings and bring these people in and take their testimony.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Well, that is a matter that would have to be determined by the commission. I will say that my own theory would be to employ some man of large experience in the conduct of some successful business, turn him loose to make inquiry under that authority, and let him make his recommendations to the commission.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Employ somebody who does not know anything about the post-office business to make an investigation of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Some man who has had experience in large business enterprises, who will know how to apply modern business methods to that service.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I will say that in deference to the judgment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] and some other members of the committee, I will withdraw the point of order, but I do not think that kind of an investigation will amount to anything

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the postal service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons permanently incapacitated for performing such service. The establishment of a civil-pension roll or an honorable-service roll, or the exemption of any of the officers, clerks, and persons in the postal service from the existing laws respecting employment in such service is hereby prohibited.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have

Page 35, following line 10, insert:
"The Postmaster-General shall each year prepare and submit in his annual report to Congress estimates of the revenue and expenditure in the postal service for the fiscal year current and also for the fiscal year next ensuing at the time such report is submitted, together with a statement of the receipts and expenditures for the preceding completed fiscal

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. What does that mean?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That means that in the annual report of the Postmaster-General he would be required to inform Congress of the expenditures and receipts for the fiscal year last past and the expenditures and receipts of the current fiscal year up to the time of the report and his general estimates on both for the ensuing fiscal year. It is merely to enlarge the scope of the information which Congress ought to have in making up the appropriation bill for that service.

Mr. MANN. The law now provides how estimates shall be sent to Congress. I am not willing that that law shall be changed, and have the Postmaster-General send his estimates direct to Congress instead of transmitting them as everybody else does

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. But this does not interfere with that.

Mr. MANN. I am not so sure whether it does or not.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I would be glad if the gentleman would examine the amendment.

Let us hear the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he put in a provision that it should not be construed as affecting the transmission of his estimates.

Mr. MANN. On hearing the amendment read again, I will state to the gentleman from New York, it refers only to an estimate of the revenues and expenditures of the current and previous years, and makes no estimate for the ensuing fiscal year. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph at the bottom of page 8 was temporarily passed over with a point of order pending against it. I understand that the gentleman from Missouri is now disposed to withdraw his point of order to that paragraph.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws his point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Then, I understand, without further action of the committee that paragraph is adopted. The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph has been read.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I call the attention of the Chair to page 12, which was passed over by unanimous consent. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Parsons], I understand, desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, line 8, insert after the words "chief stamp clerks" the words "special clerks."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, at line 19, insert after the words "chief stamp clerks" the words "special clerks."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

I would like to have some explanation.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The point is this: There are a good many employees in some post-offices under authority of employment as "clerks," at grades of thirteen and fourteen hundred dollars, some particularly designated employees like inquiry clerks, registry clerks, mail-order clerks, etc., but under the scheme of the classification, as my friend from South Carolina recalls, in order to cover those special cases, we insert the title "special clerks."

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Currier, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25483, the post-office appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken in gross.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privi-leged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Committee on Rules having had under consideration sundry resolutions relating to the bill H. R. 25483, the post-office appropriation bill, report the following substitute therefor:

"That the previous question shall be considered as ordered on said amendments immediately and on the bill to its final passage without intervening motion or appeal."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, as the House well knows, there were certain paragraphs in the post-office appropriation bill which went out on points of order. Those paragraphs covered the pay of clerks and carriers, the matter of their classification and of their transfer and promotion, and possibly some other matters. The object of this rule, if adopted, is to restore to the bill the paragraphs which went out on points of order, with some modifications agreed to by the majority, as I understand, of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and some gentlemen on both sides of the House who desired a modification. The paragraph relating to clerks in offices of the first and second class remains precisely as it was in the bill as originally re-The carrier paragraph is changed in this respect, that instead of being divided into six grades carriers are divided into The first grade salary is $600, the second grade salary is $800, and the third grade salary is $900, the fourth grade salary is $1,000, fifth grade salary $1,100, and carriers shall be promoted successively to the third grades in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be less than $50,000, and to the fourth grades in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be more than $50,000 and not in excess of $200,000, and to the fifth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be in excess of $200,000, and the remainder of the paragraph remains as reported by the committee. The paragraph with respect to promotions of both clerks and carriers remains substantially as reported by the committee.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit, the proviso with reference to the carriers was not originally in the bill. That provides for the promotions of $800 carriers who are in the service at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. DALZELL. The paragraph with respect to eligibility for transfers, and so on, remains as it was, with the exception of this proviso, which I have no doubt the gentleman was calling my attention to now:

Provided, however, That the carriers who on June 30, 1907, are regularly employed at a salary of $800 per annum shall be promoted to the fourth grade upon evidence satisfactory to the Post-Office Department of the efficiency and faithfulness of the employees during at least one year's service.

That makes the carriers of that grade eligible to immediate

With respect to the balance of the bill, the railway mail service, the changes are only in the number of clerks.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Except that the chief clerks are raised from $1,600 to $1,700.

Mr. DALZELL. From $1,600 to $1,700.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. One hundred and twenty-six of them.

Mr. DALZELL. There is a provision that the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, under such regulations as he may provide, allow a clerk who has sick leave absence with pay, and his duty is to be performed without expense to the Government during the period for which he is granted leave, not exceeding thirty days in any fiscal year.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask a question.
Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.
Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask what is the limitation on the clerks in the smaller offices? I did not catch that in the reading

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no change. Mr. DALZELL. The paragraph is as it was reported in the

Mr. FINLEY. I understood the gentleman to read that it limited the clerks in the smaller offices

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] or the chairman of the committee whether there is any change in that part of the bill applying to the carriers in the smaller offices—those under 50,000?

Mr. DALZELL. I understand not.
Mr. NORRIS. Is that the same as in the bill?
Mr. DALZELL. As in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Does that make a difference?

Mr. DALZELL. I would rather that the chairman of the committee should answer that.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That remains the same. Mr. NORRIS. The provision is in there as originally in the provision?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes, sir.
Mr. DALZELL. The result will be to write in the bill the paragraphs that were originally in the bill, with the modifications to which I have called the attention of the House. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WIL-LIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I shall not need five minutes. I want to say that the minority members of the Committee on Rules favor the amendments by the Post-Office Committee to existing law reorganizing the salary list of the Post-Office Department, and that they are willing to vote to make those amendments in order, and that they shall vote, after the rule is passed, for the legislation itself. But at the same time they find themselves unable to support the rule, because the rule cuts off all amendment. This is too important a right of a minority to surrender in any particular case whatsoever without protest, so they have not been able to vote for the rule itself, because of that part of it shutting off all amendment.

We are in favor, however, of the substantive legislation recommended to be passed and recommended to be made in order by the rule, so that it may pass, and we recognize that the only method presented to us by the majority of the House whereby the legislation may become a law is the rule as it now stands before the House. So we shall satisfy ourselves with voting against the rule as a protest against cutting off the right of amendment. After which they will vote for the substantive legislation to reorganize the salary list of the Department.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this rule, not because I like it but because if the rule is defeated no change in the salaries of clerks or carriers can be made in this Congress.

I wish the rule were amendable, but unfortunately such is not the case.

No one has yet explained to me the justice of paying a clerk or carrier in Lynn, Mass., $1,100, while a clerk or carrier of the same standing is in Salem paid only $1,000, and in Beverly is paid only $900. If the post-office employee in a large city is worthy of $1,100, he is worthy of just as much in a small city.

Gentlemen argue that living expenses are higher in large cities. Except in the matter of rent, such a contention is absolutely without foundation. Does the committee seriously contend that living costs $200 more per annum in Lynn, Mass., than in Beverly, Mass., for instance?

I should like to see this question settled for a decade by fixing a liberal and uniform maximum salary for clerks and carriers irrespective of whether they are employed in a large or in a small office.

In my opinion the interests of the clerks and carriers in small offices have been sacrificed. I am not on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I do not know the reasons for their action, but to me it seems unjust. I give the committee warning that they need not imagine that this question is disposed of. Unless the Senate equalizes these salaries, those of us who represent small cities and large towns will continue this agitation.

I submit herewith a schedule showing the maximum salaries for city delivery offices in my county, should the bill pass in its present form:

Lawrence	$1, 100
Lynn	1, 100
Salem	1, 000
Hawankill
Haverhill	1,000
Gioucester	1,000
Beverly	900
Newburyport	900

Telephone	900
Amesbury	900
Marblehead	900
Danvers	900
Andover	900

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I was astounded when the gentleman from Arkansas invoked the technical rule of "new legislation" to throw out the provisions of this bill to increase the salaries of the post-office clerks, city carriers, railway mail agents, and by that inexplainable act also preventing an increase of pay to the rural free-delivery carriers. I am for the closest economy in the expenditure of other people's money. The revenues of the Government belong to all the people, and when we pay it out we should do so with greater care and closer scrutiny than we do with our own individual funds, because what belongs to us individually can be lavishly wasted if we so desire without wrong to others, but this can not be done with the Government's resources and be called right.

And the rules of parliamentary law were all made to always invoke and conserve the right.

The gentleman from Arkansas truly says it is his right to invoke them at any and all times without criticism. the interests of good government and wise legislation that right belongs to every Congressman to use as he may see fit without let or hindrance.

But, Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary rule, necessarily inflexible, may be employed when indiscriminately used to commit grave injustice.

I believe that has been done when a technical rule was brought into life to strike down every provision to increase the pay of the most meritorious, hard-working, salary-earning employees of the Government.

I speak of the post-office clerks, the city mail carriers, the railway mail agents, and the free rural delivery carriers

A laborer is worthy of his hire, and I could never find an excuse or mollifying reason in any technicality, however plain or clear it might be, that would subvert the absolute justice and toil-earned rights of these multiplied thousands of our governmental employees, as this technical rule has done in this instance, called forth by the gentleman from Arkansas. Some of us here for years recognized the fact that these worthy employees of the Government were underpaid. And now, that in the slow process of legislation justice is about to be given them, a single voice prevents it. A single voice controls the fortunes of thousands, when that right belongs to the majority, deprived of power by a technical rule.

Mr. Speaker, I hope and trust the Committee on Rules will come to the rescue of these men and put the stricken salaries back again, and if that is done, a vast majority of this House will see that they will survive the onslaughts of every opposi-

tion

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments to the bill which have just been read by the Clerk at the desk.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the various items which were incorporated in the amendment just adopted may, in the engrossment of the bill, be engrossed at their respective places in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed by one of the reading clerks that there was one paragraph on page 6 of the bill upon which the point of order had not been made. I find that is duplicated in the amendment that has been agreed to; and I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill that may be taken care of.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and passed, will be reconsidered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Indiana will be considered as agreed to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the bill will be considered as engrossed, read the third time, and passed.

There was no objection. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following order:

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That in the engrossment of the bill (H. R. 25483) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, the Clerk be directed to insert after the paragraph of appropriation "for inland transportation by railroad route, $44,660,000;" the following:

"The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1907, for the transportation of mail on railroad routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of upward of 5,000 pounds by making the following changes in the present rates per mile per annum for the transportation of mail on such routes, and hereafter the rates on such routes shall be as follows: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mail per day of more than 5,000 pounds and less than 48,000 pounds the rate shall be 5 per cent less than the present rates on all weight carried in excess of 5,000 pounds; and on routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mail per day of more than 48,000 pounds the rate shall be 5 per cent less than the present rates on all weight carried in excess of 5,000 pounds up to 48,000 pounds, and for each additional 2,000 pounds in excess of 48,000 pounds at the rate of $19.24 upon all roads other than landgrant roads, and upon all land-grant roads the rate shall be $17.10 for each 2,000 pounds carried in excess of said 48,000 pounds.

"That after July 1, 1907, additional pay allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars shall be at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length and $27.50 per mile per annum for cars, and $32.50 per mile for 50-foot cars, and $40 per mile per annum for cars 55 feet or more in length."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?
Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina to twenty minutes Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am ready for a vote Mr. FINLEY. Is this the same thing that we considered the other day

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. This is identically the same thing adopted on Monday by the rule which directs that on the passage of this bill this shall be in order.

Mr. FINLEY. I have no remarks to make.

Mr. MURDOCK. May I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman for

Mr. MURDOCK. What provision do you make there for land-grant roads when they carry an average weight above 5,000 pounds?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It would be equivalent to a 5 per cent reduction up to 48,000 pounds, and then at the rate of $17.10 for each additional ton in excess of that.

Mr. MURDOCK. Under their present rate, which is 20 per cent off.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the order.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the order agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Overstreet of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various amendments to the bill were agreed to was ordered to lie on the table.

To his excellency the President and honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America: Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon,

Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon, most respectfully represent:

Mr. PILES. I present a memorial of the legislature of the State of Washington, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON LEGISLATURE, TENTH REGULAR SESSION-MEMORIAL

washington legislature, tenth regular session—memorial.

[In the house. By Mr. Smalley.]

To His Excellency Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States of America: to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States; and to the honorable Secretary of Agriculture:

We, your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled (tenth regular session), most respectfully represent and pray as follows:

Whereas the people of the State of Washington, di lberty-toring; and the people of the other States of the Union and from the Deople of the Other States of Mashington, di lberty-toring; and Whereas the honorable Secretary of Agriculture of the United States of America has usurped the powers, duties, and functions of the law-making power of the Government of the United States of America has usurped the powers, duties, and functions of the law-making power of the Government of Federal forest reserves; and

Whereas said Secretary of Agriculture, in pursuance of his assmued and usurped autocratic power, has caused to be arrested, prosecuted, humiliated, and disgraced a citizen of the State of Washington for an alleged violation of one of the provisions of said one-man-made criminal code (see United States & Matthews, 146 Fed. Rep., 306); and

Whereas said Secretary now threatens to criminally prosecute all citizens alleged to have violated his said criminal code; and

Whereas said congress of the United States has no constitutional power to delegate to any one man the making of criminal laws; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has no constitutional power to delegate to any one man the making of criminal laws; and timber or prairie lands or lands necessary for forest-reserve purposes; and.

Whereas large portions of such lands so withdrawn are essentially agricultural lands; and

Whereas the making of forest reserves out of lands less than 4,500 feet in altitude above sea level retards and prevents the settlement and prosperity of the West by reason of the facts, among other things, that home builders in the forest reserve will be isolated, without hope of near school or church privileges, without reasonable expectation of the making of suitable roads or the keeping of them in proper repair without extortionate individual expense and running the gantlet of "red whereas for like reasons, to a large extent, there is a confiscation of the property of those who have heretofore acquired rights or titles to lands now within the forest reserve, it being a matter of common knowledge that the denser the population in a given community the higher is the price of land; and, conversely, the more isolated, the less valuable; and anything retarding or preventing settlement correspondingly decreases the value of the land; and

Whereas there are large numbers of settlers who for years have reboundaries of forest reserves, who, if from sickness or other unavoidable casualty are compelled to leave their homestead claims, will virtually lose the results of years of toil and their improvements, for the reason that when they quit their premises before making final proof their lands will revert to the forest reserve, and in most instances no purchaser of the improvements can be found who is willing to become entangled in the meshes of forest-reserve regulations; and

Whereas under the laws of this State the possessor of land must survand if with a lawful fence in order to recover damages to crops by a forest reserve, in order to protect his crops and pasturage from forest-reserve cattle, must all suffere the order to recover damages to crops by a forest reserve, in order to protect his crops and maintaining a lawful fence, while a forest rese

Whereas very recently it has been determined to hamper the acquisition of water rights and rights of way within forest reserves, to the great detriment of the general public; and
Whereas as great protection against the ravages of forest fires can be given outside of forest reserves as within them; and
Whereas the Congress of the United States, in pursuance of a wise and liberal policy, in 1875 (18 Stat., 482) passed an act granting to rallroad companies generally rights of way across the public domain, with the right to take from adjacent land material, earth, stone, and timber necessary for the construction of such railroads, etc., which act has aided materially in the upbuilding of the West; and
Whereas the act of Congress of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1233), granting rights of way for railroads across forest reserves does not grant the right to such railroad companies to take material, earth, stone, or timber necessary for the construction of such railroads; and Whereas the making of a forest reserve segregates the land therein contained from the category of public land; and therefore said act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 482), does not apply thereto; and
Whereas the needs of the people require the speedy building of electric railways; and
Whereas the great source of water power for the operation of such railways and the providing of electric lights and power for cities and towns and for the operation of mines is situated within the limits of forest reserves; and
Whereas the present Federal restrictions tend materially to defeat the accomplishment of these benign purposes, on account of such forest reserves; and
Whereas the stock industry is impeded and discouraged by the creation of forest reserves, among other things by the imposition of a

Whereas the stock industry is impeded and discouraged by the creation of forest reserves, among other things by the imposition of a pasturage tax and the uncertainty from year to year as to the amount of such tax, and the arbitrary and petty exactions inflicted by forest officers, high and low; and

Whereas it is the avowed purpose of the Forestry Service to make the same self-supporting without an appropriation from Congress therefor, and to recruit and organize an army of forestry officers, who must be supported and maintained from the income of the reserve, which means that the communities adjacent to such forest reserves must pay the bill; and

Whereas more than $700,000 were wrested from such communities for such purposes during the last year, as against $60,000 the year before; and

Whereas many hundreds of thousands of acres of land have been placed in forest reserves in a single county in this State, namely, Okanogan County, against the unanimous profest of the citizens of that county, as far as the recent temporary withdrawals are concerned; and Whereas the people of a local community can best be trusted to decide what is for their best interests and those of their children and their children's children:

Therefore we most earnestly and respectfully protest against the making of said temporary withdrawals premanent, and ask that they be immediately set aside and that the lands therein described be at once restored to the public domain.

The secretary of state is hereby directed to immediately transmit a certified copy of this memorial to His Excellency the President of the United States of America, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the honorable Secretary of Agriculture, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, authorized and instructed to prepare and report to the Senate, within thirty days after the beginning of the next session of Congress, a joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress, proposing to the several States amendments to the Constitution of the United States which shall provide, in substance, for the prohibition and punishment of polygamous marriages and plural cohabitation, contracted or practiced within the United States and in every place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and which shall, in substance, also require all persons taking office under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or of any State, to take and subscribe an oath that he or she is not, and will not be, a member or adherent of any organization whatever the laws, rules, or nature of which organization require him or her to disregard his or her duty to support and maintain the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the several States.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that the resolution may go over until

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that the resolution may go over until to-morrow, and to-morrow I hope to get a vote of the Senate upon the passage of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

CONFERENCES AND CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be requested to consider the matter of conference reports and the power of conferees in dealing with the same; to determine what is permissible and what is not, and to report a rule to the Senate covering the subject-matter and providing for the orderly procedure in such cases.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not know whether the Senator from South Carolina was present or is advised about it, but I invite his attention to the resolution which I introduced some weeks ago—a month ago, probably—directing the Committee on Rules to incorporate in the Senate Manual the rules governing conferences and conference reports, prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, which has practically been adopted as the rules of the Senate, I understand. I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin if any action has yet been taken by the Committee on Rules upon that resolution?

Mr. SPOONER.. It is expected that the committee will meet to-morrow and act on the resolution. But I do not think, if the committee should act upon it, it would accomplish the purpose which is sought by the Senator from South Carolina. Incorporating them in the Manual as a matter of information would not make them rules of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that those rules are practically the rules of the Senate now. They would be more effective, it is true, if the Senate should formally adopt them as the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no rule of the Senate now which warrants a point of order upon a conference report, I understand. I think the Senator from South Carolina has in view the adoption of a rule which willMr. TILLMAN. Settle it.

Mr. SPOONER. Give power to raise that question. It is done in the House. The resolution does not at all conflict with the matter referred to by the Senator from Texas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELASTICITY IN THE CURRENCY.

Mr. DEPEW submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be authorized to investigate and report what legislation, if any, may be necessary in relation to the deposit of public moneys and the issue of currency to prevent conditions of abnormal and dangerous rates of interest at certain periods of the year and provide such elasticity in the currency that it will be more responsive to the conditions of business.

UNITED STATES MILITIA.

Mr. DICK submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed, at the Government Printing Office, for the use of the War Department, 2,500 copies of the report of The Military Secretary of the Army relative to the militia of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906.

INCORPORATION OF BANKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 6906) to provide for the incorporation of banks within the District of Columbia.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL,

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW BRIDGE; LOUISIANA.

Mr. McENERY. I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me for a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. PROCTOR. I yield to the Senator. Mr. McENERY. I ask unanimous consent for the present Mr. McENERY. consideration of the bill (H. R. 22338) to bridge Bayou Bartholomew, in Louisiana.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN TRIBAL FUNDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5290) providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. Clapp, Mr. Sutherland, and Mr. Stone as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 25483. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

AGRICULTURAL -APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, at the close of the debate on the forestry proposition a couple of days ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] had made some observations regarding the Forest Service. With nearly everything that the Senator said I heartily agreed; but I think it is proper With nearly everything to take this opportunity to state the position of many of those who oppose the extraordinary features of this agricultural appropriation bill. I think it is proper to give a statement of the position which they occupy in regard to the Forestry Service as a service.

Certainly there can be no section of the country that is more interested in the proper conservation of the forests and the proper conservation of the waters of the arid regions than the people who live in those regions. I think there will be found no voice raised against a proper forestry policy by those who are opposing, as I said, these extraordinary provisions. We have complained, and complained bitterly at times, as to the administration and the policy that is pursued in the carrying out of the Forestry Service.

I take occasion here and now also, from a personal acquaintance of a number of years, to bear my testimony to the high character of the man who is at present at the head of that Service. But, Mr. President, I think there is very little conception on the part of the Senate of the United States or the country as to the extent to which the Forest Service has been carried and the power of the Forester increased. The very high character and the earnestness and the single-mindedness of the man who has had charge of that Service has worked to the irreparable injury of the section of the country over which it is extended. He is a man who is single in his aim. He has made forestry the study of his lifetime. Therefore it is not strange that he can not see things in their true relative value. To him the preservation of the forests and forest culture are the highest earthly object attainable. But many of us who live near the forests believe that it is better to devote an acre that will support a man to the support of the man, instead of to the support of the trees. It is unfortunate that in viewing matters from his standpoint he can not realize the practical necessities and difficulties that occur to those who have not the Forest Service primarily in mind.

The Senator from Wisconsin in his closing remarks-and I sought a moment then to say a few words, but it was latein reply to a few remarks by the Senator from Indiana, that it was no part of the intention of the Forestry Service to do aught than that for which it was created, to wit, the conservation of the forests and the conservation of the streams; that there was no purpose to create game preserves or breeding grounds for wild animals. The Senator undoubtedly supposed that he was speaking true as to the fact; but I will say to the Senator that one of the declared purposes of the Forestry Service is to make of all the forest reserves game preserves. That is shown from the fact that in hearings before the committees of this body the Forester, Mr. Pinchot, has advocated making game preserves of the forest reserves. It is shown from the fact that there have been introduced and are now upon the Calendar, or perhaps have already passed the Senate, bills containing provisions that in certain States and in certain reserves there shall be game preserves.

ame preserves. Mr. President, I have here—— Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming ield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. With pleasure. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Would the fact that a forest reserve was also a game preserve injure the forests?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Possibly not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, where is the criticism, assuming what the Senator says to be accurate, in making of the forest the double use of a forest reserve and a game preserve, since the killing off of the animals would not help the forests?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is not the proposition. The statement was made that there was no intention to create game preserves in the forest reserves. I do not care now to argue the relative value of forest reserves and game preserves. I am merely controverting the statement that there was no such in-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was not here; I was in my committee room; but evidently, from what the Senator says, the observation of the Senator from Wisconsin was made in answer to some sort of a criticism that had been made upon the Department because in its administration of the forests it actually had prevented the killing of animals.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; no. Mr. BEVERIDGE. The question that naturally runs through my mind

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator must state it

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, state it squarely, then.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not as the Senator stated it, but to make game preserves.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, to make game preserves; put it in the Senator's language. But the question which suggested itself to my uninstructed mind upon this subject was whether or not, if the forest preserves were a good thing, which the Senator admits, they would be injured by making them at the same time game preserves; and a Senator who sits at my left, who knows all about the subject, tells me that the forests are not only not injured by making them also game preserves, but they are actually benefited.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I expect they would be, because if you make them game preserves you will not find any sheep grazing on them. But my objection is this—and the Senator forces from me, by his very plain question, a statement of my democracy—I do not believe that the General Government of the United States has any authority whatever to establish any police regulations in a sovereign State, and I question the power of the Government to establish a game preserve as against the police power or the game power of a State. But I do not want to enter into the discussion, Mr. President, as to whether that is the law or not. I am discussing the fact as to whether it is the intention of the Forest Service to establish game preserves. Whether it be good or bad is not to the purpose of the argument.

Will the Senator permit me another Mr. BEVERIDGE. question?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not going to interrupt the Senator long. But upon the interesting governmental question which he suggests-and of course we are not going into the debate on that, for it would probably take several sessions to debate itthe Senator must also add to his statement that these forestry reserves are created not out of land belonging to the States, but out of land the title to which is and always has been in the

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the fact that the title is in the nation does not divest the State of jurisdiction over the land, even though it belongs to the nation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Furthermore, all of the land that is in the State to which the State has title was given to it by the nation, just as the State itself was created by the nation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let me ask the Senator a ques-I want to get the Senator's view. tor contend that because this is Government land the State has no jurisdiction over it, police or otherwise, when it is put into a forest reserve?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not think the question is pertinent to the subject. The Senator was criticising and was making a statement of what he declared to be his democracy.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I was not criticising; I was answering the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That the National Government, as a fundamental governmental proposition, does not have the right to exercise what he calls the police power within the limits of a sovereign State over land belonging to the Government.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Wyoming will permit

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I think the statement of the Senator from Wyoming, as a matter of law, is sound. The best judicial pronouncement on this question of which I have knowledge is contained in an opinion by Judge Sawyer, of the circuit court of California, in The Mining Débris case (Woodruff v. Mining Company, 9 Sawy., 441, 491; 18 Fed. Rept., 753, 772). The concluding and pertinent part of the opinion reads as follows:

Thenceforth the only interest of the United States in the public lands was that of a proprietor, like that of any other proprietor, except that the State, under the express terms upon which it was admitted, could pass no laws to interfere with their primary disposal, and they were not subject to taxation. In all other respects the United States stood upon the same footing as private owners of land.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In other words, Mr. President-and I am

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am sure that the whole opinion can not bear out just what a portion of it would seem to imply, and of course we can not take the time for the discussion of that, but I point out to the Senator that what he has read means this, that in a State which the nation itself has created and as to the land which the nation itself owns, the nation—the creator—stands upon no other footing than any other citizen, and is, for the purposes of ownership of the land, merely a citizen of the State. That is absurd.

Mr. CARTER In the first place, the National Government did not create the States. The people living within a given jurisdiction create a State, which is admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original thirteen States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the Senator will agree with me that the people created the material for statehood and the nation created that governmental entity called the "State."

Mr. CARTER. That is a difference of opinion upon the technical statement of the case. But I think it would be well to quote further from the opinion which I read, all that part which is pertinent to this discussion, to the end that the Record may disclose the full statement.

may disclose the full statement.

Upon the cession of California by Mexico the sovereignty and the proprietorship of all the lands within its borders, in which no private interest had vested, passed to the United States. Upon the admission of California into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States the sovereignty for all internal municipal purposes and for all purposes except such purposes and with such powers as are expressly conferred upon the National Government by the Constitution of the United States passed to the State of California. Thenceforth the only interest of the United States in the public lands was that of a proprietor, like that of any other proprietor, except that the State, under the express terms upon which it was admitted, could pass no laws to interfere with their primary disposal, and they were not subject to taxation. In all other respects the United States stood upon the same footing as private owners of land.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me to make a statement. I have listened to the decision anoted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Clark] and the statement of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark] with profound interest, because it appears that there is one law in the East and another law in the There happens to be a reservation purchased by the Government for fortification purposes in the little town where I live. Through that reservation passes a town road that has been there for half a century or more, built by the town. We can not even run a street railway-track over that road without the permission of the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming and Mr. FULTON addressed the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. Wait; let me finish my sentence. We can not enter that Government reservation for police purposes; it is absolutely taken from us.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

Mr. LODGE. One minute; let me finish. In the West is all this territory, bought or conquered by the old States. quired it all. On that territory citizens went and formed a State which we recognized. Part of that State belongs to the Government in the form of public lands, and now we are told here that the United States can not control its own land, the title of which never parted from it. If they can not do it in the West, they can not do it in the East. I have never in my life heard of State rights carried to that extravagant extent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And not only that, Mr. President; not only the observation made by the Senator from Massachusetts, but this further deduction from the decision, or the part of it which the Senator from Montana read, is that not only has the Government of the United States, which owns the land and always owned the land, and which created the governmental entity known as the "State"—not only is the nation on the footing of any other citizen or owner, but that it—the nationover its own land is subject to the local laws of the State which the nation itself created. That is absurd.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I must decline to yield further. because I want a little say in this myself, and I do not propose to be put in the wrong nor have the West put in the wrong.

The statement of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] I presume is correct, because I think it is the universal practice of the Government of the United States, when it takes a reservation purchased from a State, to compel the State to cede jurisdiction over that reservation. That is the reason the United States and not the State of Wyoming has jurisdiction in the great Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Just wait until I have finished one sentence and then I will yield. The United States has jurisdiction over the Yellowstone National Park not because it is the property of the United States, but because the legislature of Wyoming specially ceded its jurisdiction over the Yellowstone National Park; and to say that the Government of the United States is not subject to local control of its lands is to say that lawlessness, in so far as State control is concerned, shall prelawlessness, in so far as state control is country, the title to valid over the whole area of the western country, the title to which is in the Government of the United States. It is a proposition that can not stand either in law or good morals. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the provision, with which, of course, he is perfectly familiar, in the Constitution which gives to the General Government exclusive jurisdiction over land ceded to it for military purposes, for the purpose of building forts and ar-senals, and buildings of that character. That is where the distinction lies. Under the Constitution the General Government has exclusive jurisdiction in cases of that character.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, there is no question as to that, the Senator from Massachusetts to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming

yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have arranged with the Senator that he would yield to this question, Mr. President. I must press this further question upon the Senator from Wyoming and the this further question upon the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Montana. In view of the position the Senators have taken, I merely ask this question. Do they contend that the United States, as the proprietor of the land within the borders of a State, is subject to the laws of the State with respect to its own property?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, the Senator having thought out the question and asked it with deliberation, I should like to have him repeat it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think I can repeat it almost verbatim. Does the Senator contend that the United States with respect to its own land, located within the limits of a State, is subject to the laws of that State, like any other proprietor of Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no. As to taxation and matters of that sort the Government is exempt. But the proposition of the Senator from Wyoming is this, that the power of the State extends over the lands of the Government and the jurisdiction extends over the lands of the Government, the same as over the lands of any other proprietor, except where exclusive jurisdiction is retained in the Government; in other words—and I will content myself with this answer and the Senator must content himself with it, because I do not want to branch out into that discussion-if a crime is committed upon the public land of the United States, the State control covers that land and the crime is triable in the State court and not in the United States court. I do not care, Mr. President, about that, however, and I shall decline to pursue this matter fur-ther, because it does not pertain to the question which was raised by the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin that so far as he knew, there was no desire to make game preserves out of the forest reserves.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. I made that observation because the purposes of the forest reserve, as declared by the law, do not include the establishment of game preserves. That was the sense in which I intended to speak; that it was not considered one of the objects at all, however, it might be considered incidentally. Now, if the Senator will permit me, I doubt if we disagree upon the matter which he is discussing. Of course when a Territory is admitted into the Union, all police power which theretofore had existed in Congress passes to the State. The State, of course, makes its game laws. The title, however, The title, however, of the Federal Government to its lands in the State is not in the slightest degree affected.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not in the slightest.

Mr. SPOONER. As an owner or proprietor the Federal Government has the power to do in the States—and the right to do in the States—as to its lands what other proprietors in the States may do. The Senator, I suppose, will not deny that the Government has the right to prevent hunting upon its lands just as individual proprietors may do, if they see fit.

 Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am inclined to think the Senator is right, although I hesitate to accept the doctrine.
 Mr. SPOONER. But the Government, the Senator would contend-and as to that I would not for a moment controvert himcan not establish game laws and game regulations in conflict with the game laws of the State.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is certainly the position of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SPOONER. But the power of the Government to create upon its land a game preserve in order to preserve the animals the Senator would not deny.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I would not. I am not attempting to deny any power. I am simply leading up to a question which I intended to present to the Senator from Wisconsin and others when we were drawn off by the discussion of this constitutional

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The proprietor of land—the private person—as the Senator from Wisconsin, of course, said, can permit hunting on his land or exclude it.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Therefore he can prescribe rules by which he will permit you or me or anybody else to go on the land, if he wants to, can he not?

Mr. SPOONER. I think not. That is to say—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If I own a thousand acres of forest land, can keep you and everybody else from hunting on it, if I see

Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or I can let you all go on it, if I wish, or can permit you, as a personal friend, to go on it, if I wish, or may exclude some person that I do not like.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Owning this land, having all these rights, does the Senator mean to say the greater does not include the less, and that so far as this thousand acres is concerned I can not establish rules which shall give the man who manages that land for me the discretion by which the public may go in and hunt or be kept out?

Mr. SPOONER. What I mean to say is this: That if the Senator owns lands, he may permit me to go upon it or he can prohibit me from going upon it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. He may permit me to go upon it to hunt partridges, if you please, but he can not make it lawful by his permission for me to kill partridges upon his land when the State law provides that in that month no partridges shall be killed in the State.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Quite so; but the Senator stated that no rules could be established.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If I can permit the Senator to go on or keep him off, as he states, can I permit him to go on and hunt in the forenoon and not in the afternoon?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not speak of that. I am speaking of the general law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So that if the analogy be made between the Government as a proprietor and an individual as a proprietor, then, even on that narrow basis, the Government has the same right to make all the rules that a private proprietor of land would have.

Mr. SPOONER. The Government has the right to permit hunters to go upon forest reservations and hunt during the period that hunting is permitted by the State.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; and in any way it pleases.

Mr. SPOONER. And no more. But we can not take the time of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Could the Government over its own land prohibit hunting on its own land during the period when the State permits hunting?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well; that is all. The Government does have some control over its own after all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I might have realized what a debate would be provoked by consenting to discuss legal proposition on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator and I do not disagree.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think not at all.
But what I was directing attention to was the avowed intention of the Forestry Service to establish game preserves, and 1 was speaking not with the intention of antagonizing game preserves, not with the intention of expressing an opinion whether they were good or bad, but with reference to what has been hinted at by the Senator from Wisconsin, that this was not a matter contemplated by the act of Congress permitting the establishment of forest reserves. But the constant tendency of this Bureau ever since it has been established has been to reach out and cover ground, and more ground, and accumulate to itself power and authority that never was contemplated by the Congress of the United States and which is detrimental and injurious to and almost destructive of the interests of many sections of our country.

Who could have supposed when, in 1891, Congress authorized the President of the United States by Executive proclamation to set aside forest lands that within this brief time 200,000 square miles of land would be set apart from settlement among the lands and mountains of the West? We do not understand the significance of these figures. But if I say to the Senate of the United States that within the last few years there has been withdrawn from settlement, from entry, from useful occupation, from home making, a tract of land, substantially, which, taking a north and south line 200 miles through the city of New York, would extend west to the city of Chicago, a thousand miles, I am not overstating the amount of land. The Bureau of Forestry has withdrawn from the useful service of the people an amount of land which would cover acre for acre the whole of New England; add to New England the State of New York, the magnificent Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the splendid empire of Ohio, and acre for acre you have covered the lands withdrawn under this forest policy. That is an astounding statement.

Then in some respects this agricultural bill is the most wonderful that has ever been presented to the Congress, because, in addition to 127,000,000 acres already withdrawn, it proposes to withdraw 400,000,000 acres more and put them under the charge of a single bureau chief. Mr. President, this bill gives to one man more power over men and property and money than is now held by any individual king, prince, potentate, or subject in any civilized country on the face of the earth. Against the grant of such a power my face is unalterably set. That seems a broad statement, but it is true to the fact. On page 71 of this bill it is proposed to take all the grazing lands of the United States in the country where the forest reserves are— the arid region—and, as stated by the Chief of the Bureau, Mr. Pinchot, to put them under his charge to lease and let and permit upon at his will and at his figures,

The Bureau of Forestry is now the greatest lumbering interest on the face of the earth. Talk about your lumber barons; your lumber monopolies! Where is the man, save the Chief of this Bureau, who has under his absolute control 127,000,000 acres of timber, much of it the finest on God's footstool? Where is the man who can use the Government force and the whole power and treasure of the Government in his lumbering operations, selling to whom he pleases, in what amounts he pleases, and at what prices he pleases, and without responsi-bility to the Congress of the United States or any other body of men or authority? Show me the parallel in this Government or any other, if you can.

And then, if you care to, add to this 400,000,000 acres of land which he has asked us to put under his control, and he wields a power over an empire the like of which is not wielded by any other man beneath the shining sun.

We in the West have had troubles with the Forest Service. We recognize that in the proper administration of the forests and the proper conservation of our water supply lies our sal-vation. We believe that the forestry proposition is the salvation for our country. But it is being made the damnation of the country, and the time is coming, and coming soon, if this policy is pursued, when a halt will be called to the settlement, the development, the industries, and the future of the western country

Mr. President, it has been impossible for us who have been under this service to properly place before the East our attitude. A man who nowadays raises his voice against the Forestry Service is at once denominated as a grafter, a timber baron, a robber of the public domain. A man who dares to criticise the administration of our public-land laws falls into the same category and is pilloried-if not in court, at least in the Departments and the public press-as a despoiler of the public domain.

When this question came before the Senate three or four days ago and a little information began to trickle through of the power sought to be taken by this Bureau, I was pleased and gratified to observe that when it reached the good old granite hills of New Hampshire and the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] found that the object and purpose of this Bureau was to control and sell the waters flowing from any forest reserve, and when he found out that the avowed purpose, as announced by its champion on the floor of the Senate, in the creation of the White Mountain Forest Reserve was to put a tax upon every spindle turning upon the Merrimac River, he began to sit up and take notice.

Mr. President, I want to go back to the matter of game pre-One thing that we complain of is the improvident way in which these reserves have been created.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Recurring to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire to prevent the Forest Reserve Service from charging for water within the reserves, I want to know whether the Senator from Wyoming desires to differentiate between the Government charging for the use of water within the forest reserves and compelling the owners of stock to pay to the Government a tax for grazing on the forest reserves. If the one is wrong, then the other is wrong.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think they are both wrong.

Mr. PATTERSON. I agree with the Senator, and it is my purpose, before we are through with this discussion, to offer an amendment prohibiting the Forest Reserve Bureau from charging the stockmen of the West for grazing their cattle and other stock within the limits of a reserve.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As at present advised, I shall take pleasure in supporting the amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to his colleague?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to appeal to my colleague, and more especially to the Senator from Colorado, to know if they propose to amend the law in a way which would leave the forest reserves locked up against the live stock of the western country, or whether they propose that the cattlemen and sheepmen shall have the right to graze, consistent with the preservation of the reserve, under some other system which does not tax the live-stock men?

In this connection I will say that if the United States can afford to make no charge for grazing in the forests, I should be very glad to support that view. But, Mr. President, I do not want to be one of those, I do not believe my colleague wants to be one, I do not believe the Senator from Colorado wants to be one who would blot out all of this great domain that is reserved for forest reserves and lock it up against settlers, farmers, and stockmen and from grazing, and turn all of the stock now fed upon those reserves down upon the settlers and other stockmen in other parts of the western country. This to the ruination of stockmen and the destruction of the grasses upon the public domain.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does to Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly. Mr. PATTERSON. I will not occupy much of the time of the Senator from Wyoming.

I desire to say, speaking for myself and speaking for others who are not here, but who are deeply interested in the welfare of the country and the preservation of the grazing lands, that I am not one of those who for a moment would think of depriving the stockmen of the West of the grass within the forest reserves. My conviction is that the proceeds from the sale of timber alone will make the Forestry Bureau self-sustaining in a couple of years, and that no necessity exists for, and there is no wisdom in, changing a system that has prevailed up to the present time and ever since the West commenced to be settled.

Mr. President, I believe in forest reserves, but I believe in forest reserves, not in turning great areas of land that contain no forests into the exclusive possession of a bureau under the name of "forest reserves." The cattle and stock men of the West will in the future, as they have in the past, see to it that pasture is not destroyed, that rules and regulations which have always been adopted and enforced, just and equitable, shall continue to exist, but I insist that so far as the stockmen and everybody else in the West are concerned they shall not be deprived of the rights and privileges that every inhabitant of the United States has been enjoying ever since we have had public lands

Mr. President, there should be forest reserves, but before forest reserves are declared there should be a classification of the lands within the areas which are denominated "forest reserves," and the lands that are agricultural and those that are mineral and which are not valuable for timber should be excluded from the forest reserves. When that is done we will have forest reserves in fact as well as in name, and there will be little or no objection heard from the people of the West when the reserves are instituted.

I beg pardon of the Senator from Wyoming for taking so much of his time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not for a question as long as that of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I would not presume to ask the Senator to yield for a question as long as that of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I cheerfully yield to the Senator

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In answer to the Senator from Colorado. as to his purpose to put in an amendment preventing the Government from charging the stockmen for grazing their cattle on the forest lands, the Senator from Wyoming said he would support the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As at present advised.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As at present advised. I trust the Senator will get a little light later on which will change his view.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will act upon it if I do.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am sure the Senator will, and in order that he as well as I may get some light, I feel compelled to ask a

The Senator raised the analogy between the proprietorship by the Government of lands and the proprietorship by an individual of lands. The Senator from Colorado has referred to rightsthat word has a legal meaning, and he is a lawyer—which the stockmen had in grazing without charge their cattle on the public lands. The question I wish to ask is this: If a private public lands. owner of land has the right to charge another person for grazowher of land has the right to charge another person for graz-ing cattle on his lands and ought to do it, why ought not the Government of the United States to charge stockmen for graz-ing cattle on its land? Why should the Government of the United States deprive itself of its just revenues for the profit of men already rolling in millions, that they may graze their

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I shall not answer the legal question that is propounded. I suppose it was propounded to the Senator from Colorado. But I will say that ever since the English-speaking race existed the right of free common has existed. Ever since we have had a public domain that custom, growing into a right, has prevailed, and never has it been questioned.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to ask him another question, and I think I shall ask him no more?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator rest his position upon the right of common?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I shall not answer a question of that sort, because the Senator is attempting to force me into a position I have not taken. The Senator said that I said I would support the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, as I am at present advised. But I took no position on that subject. I am subject to advice. If called upon to vote now, I should vote for the amendment. But I am not discussing, in this controversy at least, the propriety of the Government charging or not charging, like an individual. I hope the Senator will recognize

Mr, BEVERIDGE. I do. The question I am now asking the Senator is with reference to his last statement. I ask him whether or not he bases any contention of the right of stockmen to pasture their stock upon Government land free upon the ancient right of common?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all. Not entirely.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is one of the reasons, but another reason is because I believe that the Government of the United States never was called into existence to become merchant, to run a lumber yard, or to sell grass or hay. believe it never was called into existence in order to make the public lands of the United States yield revenue. The policy of the public-land system ever since it was inaugurated was and has been to give away public lands free and without charge to those who would make their homes on them, and the charging of fees, the selling of water, or the selling of timber is a reversal of the policy of this Government in those particulars from the

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the yield to the Senator from Colorado? Does the Senator from Wyoming

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am somewhat involved in this part of the controversy, and I wish to make a very short suggestion to the Senator from Indiana in reference to this question.

There is a marvelous difference between the private ownership and the public ownership of land, and even though lands are in private ownership, if they are left unfenced they stand open the use of the public, and the owner of private land is compelled, if he will prevent trespass upon them by cattle, to fence them from cattle and to exercise that character of ownership over them that is a warning to all that they are to be re-Served strictly for private use.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Colorado challenges

He must permit me to ask a question.

Mr. PATTERSON. , I am not quite through.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not expect to wait until the Sena-

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I think I must insist on these interruptions coming to an end.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let us settle this little controversy. Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not fair to the Senator from Wyoming to permit the Senator from Colorado

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will yield to the Senator for his question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I must say this to both Senators: The Senator from Wyoming must not permit the Senator from Colorado to directly ask me a question and call my attention to it without permitting me to answer.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I yield to the Senator from Indi-I hope the time taken for explanation may be usefully employed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator from Colorado contend as a matter of law that the only way in which a private proprietor could keep the public off his land is by fencing? Would he not have the right to patrol it if he wished, or employ any other method that he wished?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think not. If the private owner of and keeps his land open, it is subject to be occupied by any cattle that are roaming or grazing in the country, and the owner of such stock is not subject to damages. There is a duty devolving upon the private ownership of land. Public ownership can not be likened unto it. There is no proposition on the part of the Government to fence any of the forest reserves, and the man who has his stock grazing in their locality, if they cross the imaginary line, is supposed to be amenable to the criminal law and to suffer loss in pocket if not in person for permitting his live stock to go upon the public lands, which belong to all the people and which all the people have been occupying and using until this miracle of virtue and excellence made his appearance and so impressed his personality upon the Government that the public lands have been turned over to him to do with as he pleases.

I am a little tired of the adulation which has been moving through this Chamber from the time this discussion commenced and which has been poured out upon the head of the Chief of this Service.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will yield to the Senator for a

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right. The Senator does it for the reason I have mentioned to him and which he understands.

The Senator from Colorado was not in the Chamber when the comparison was instituted between private proprietorship and Government proprietorship, which it was claimed was identical. That is rather a new and novel proposition to some of us. That part of the discussion the Senator missed. But the Senator from Colorado now makes Government proprietorship even less than private proprietorship in its rights. Pretty soon we will have the Government extinguished altogether in the interests of the cattle growers.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have never seen the least benefit in a legal discussion on the floor of the United States Senate upon collateral matters. A layman can get more advice on all sides of any subject in the Senate of the United States than in any law office on the face of the earth, and it is generally very unsatisfactory

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say that the Senator himself suggested every legal point.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. After having yielded to the Senator for more than three-quarters of an hour to interject into the debate, I think it is hardly courteous for the Senator to make that observation, which was entirely uncalled for by anything that I had said in the way of pleasantry.

Mr. President, the point I started some hour and a half ago to attempt to elucidate was the improvidence with which reserves have been created. Perhaps it will not be uninteresting to recall the inception of the forest-reserve policy. In 1891 in a very small section of a bill we passed a law authorizing the President of the United States to set aside lands for forest reserves, the purpose at that time being to conserve the water supply, primarily. At that time it was thought that the matter was of some importance and that some definite system should be had and some method prescribed by which these lands should be segregated from the great body of the public lands. When that law was passed the Secretary of the Interior, under whose jurisdiction the execution of it passed, provided rules and regulations under which forest reserves should be established; and to see how closely it was in the mind of the Department at that time that the interests of the various localities should be consulted before a forest reserve should be created, it was provided that no forest reserve should be created until advertisement had been made for a number of weeks in the vicinity of the reserve, so that those who were concerned and who lived near by might have an opportunity to come forward and be heard.

Whether or not any forest reserves were established under that method I do not know. But there are Senators in the Chamber who were here with me when President Cleveland's first blanket reserve order was issued. It was a new thing to We found upon our desks one morning the proclamation of the President setting apart millions of acres of land without the knowledge, without the advice or the consent of a single Member of Congress or a single individual, so far as known, violating his own rules of procedure, setting aside the rules of the General Land Office and the Department of the Interior, and creating offhand these reserves. Reserves at that time were created upon the report of a commission which was authorized by the Congress of the United States. We had appropriated $25,000 to pay the expense of the commission, who should travel through the mountain countries, examine the forests, and recommend for forest reserves such sections of land as they thought advisable and expedient. They returned to Washington and made their report. Upon their report President Cleveland's proclamation was issued. Upon that report millions of land in Wyoming, Idaho, Utah, Montana, Washington, and Oregon were taken out of the public domain.

It afterwards developed that that commission, in making its report, made no examination of the forests which it had created into reserves. In answer to my own question the chairman of the commission said that he had not been upon the reserves in my own State, although requested so to do, and although transportation facilities had been provided by the peo-ple who were interested in the subject-matter. From that day to this the creation of these forest reserves has gone along alike improvidently and often without knowledge beforehand of the citizens of the States where reserves are created.

There seems to be a disposition that wherever a piece of forest is heard of that immediately it shall be made into a forest reserve, whether it is upon the public domain or elsewhere. That has been most forcibly illustrated within the last ninety days, when there has been withdrawn from allotment in the Choctaw and Chickasaw and Cherokee nations of the Indian Territory 4,000,000 acres of Indian land.

Mr. President, the manner in which that reserve is sought to be created is but a fair illustration of the policy that has prevailed in the segregation of these lands. Under the law the Secretary of the Interior was directed to allot the lands to the Indians in Indian ownership. He was given the power after the allotment should have been made, if there was any surplus land, to sell it, in his discretion, for the best price obtainable for the benefit of the Indians.

While the allotment was in process, before the Indians had made all their selection, while selections were being made upon that particular tract of land or in that section of the country, the order went from the Interior Department to the Commis sioner of the Five Civilized Tribes to suspend all allotments upon that particular section of the country and to take no action upon any allotments already made.

Protests began to come in, and inquiry was made of the Secretary of the Interior as to his purpose and the legality of his act. He said it was withdrawn at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture for forest-reserve purposes. Inquiry in detail was then made, and the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture and Mr. Pinchot, the Chief Forester, came before the committee to explain just how it was proposed to make private lands into a Government forest reserve. The explanation was made that the withdrawal was simply tentative and temporary, giving Congress an opportunity to purchase from those Indians the 4,000,000 acres of land and turn them into a forest reserve.

The details of that transaction are interesting, and I think I will recite them as near as I can remember them. One Jack Gordon, a citizen of Texas, doubtless a very estimable man, wrote to the Secretary of the Interior and wanted to purchase a large amount of land in the southeastern part of Indian Territory to make a private game preserve. The Secretary of the Interior, doubting his authority to do that, referred the matter to the Agricultural Department for its opinion. Probably the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Forestry thought no man would care to have a private game preserve unless there was some timber upon it, and having had their attention called to the fact that there was timber in the southeastern part of the Indian Territory they at once conceived the idea of putting it into a forest reserve.

Thereupon the Department of Forestry sent its agent, one Mr. William F. Cox, its expert, down to explore the country. According to his statement he was there two weeks. Four million acres is a good bit of land if you try to walk over it in He went down into that country, where probably he had never been before. A week of his time he spent in Muscogee, getting information from Government officials and others. The other week of his time he spent upon the land. At the end of two weeks—I think it was two weeks; it was an insignificant time anyway-he wired and made a written report to the Department here recommending the withdrawal of all the Indian lands from allotment east of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, and embracting a section of country comprising 4,000,000 acres of Indian land.

I have his report before me, and I propose to read from it as illustrating the terribly careless manner in which forest reserves are created. The report goes on to state the kind of a country it is, that it is rough, that it is rocky, that some parts of it are good for agriculture, that much of it is not, that some of it has much valuable timber and some not so valuable, and recommends the withdrawal of the 4,000,000

Now, as to whether there are game preserves intended to be created in this tract, I wish to read and to have go into the RECORD the concluding parts of the report. After, of course, giving the other standard reasons for a forest reserve, to conserve the waters, stop floods, etc., he says:

As a game refuge the reserve could be made exceedingly valuable, for then the game laws could be enforced.

I should like the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] as to this particular matter.

At present deer are being hunted winter and summer, until even in the roughest mountains they are well-nigh exterminated. Two or three years ago turkeys were very abundant, and now they are everywhere scarce. If the enforcement of even very ordinary game laws—

The Senator from Wisconsin will observe that it is the idea to establish Government game laws-such as a short open season and a reasonable bag for turkeys and prohibiting the use of dogs for hunting deer, the reserve would soon become very attractive to sportsmen and a delightful camping ground for people of the lower Mississippi River Valley.

Mr. SPOONER. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am reading a report upon which a forest reserve is sought to be created in the Indian Territory by the Forestry Department as illustrating the improvident manner in which these reserves are created and as further illustrating the fact that in the creation of the reserve something else is looked to beyond the preservation of the timber and the conservation of the waters.

That land, Mr. President, belongs to the Indians; not an acre of it to the United States. The proposition in this report is that the Government shall purchase that 4,000,000 acres of land from the Indians, at its appraised value, as a commercial proposition, and the statement is made that in three years enough revenue will be derived from it to pay the Indians the entire cost of the land.

Mr. President, I did not intend to speak of the merits of this particular proposition, but the iniquity of it is in the fact that of all graft ever attempted in the Indian Territory this is the largest and the most wholesale.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. With great pleasure, Mr. TILLMAN. Who makes the appraisement?

Mr. TILLMAN. Who makes the appraisement? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I come to that now. The appraisement of that land is made by the Dawes Commission, acting, of course, under the Government of the United States. The Dawes Commission never attempted to appraise land at its true value. The appraisement of land by the Dawes Commission all over the Five Civilized Tribes was on a comparative basis, so as to regulate and approximate the proper amount of land that each individual would get as his share of the great common land of the Indians. So when they say that land is worth 25 cents an acre it does not mean that 25 cents is the value of that land, but it means that an acre of that land is worth only half as much as an acre of land appraised at 50 cents an acre. The consequence is that the value of land in the Indian Territory as appraised by the Dawes Commission does not approximate the true value of the land.

Now, the proposition of this inspector is that the Government shall take that land at its appraised value from the Indian, whether he wants to sell it or not, and that in three years the Government can get enough from the product of the land, buying it so low, to pay the Indians for the land and the Government will own it.

Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly. Mr. TILLMAN. Does the report the Senator quotes from indicate how the Government would get the money? What would it sell? Does the report indicate?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The proposition is to come before Congress, I suppose, and have Congress authorize the purchase of the land by the Government. I suppose that is the proposi-

Mr. TILLMAN. The report, as I understood the Senator, said that they can get enough from the land in three years to pay for it. How are they going to get anything? What are they going to sell?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They are going to sell timber.
Mr. TILLMAN. And are they going to sell hunting rights?
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not know what else; but timber, I suppose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is there any coal under it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Further on in the report it indicates where some revenue might be derived:

In this connection it is recommended that the patenting of home lots be provided for in the reserve, so that people from the thickly settled States around about may actually own homes here in the hills, where they can breathe in air that is pure and enjoy mountain scenery which compares favorably with the best in the Appalachians.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is there any coal under the land?
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not know, but I suppose likely there is. There is coal more or less all through that Mr. President, as I said, I am reading this simply for the purpose of calling attention to the improvident way in which these reserves are created or sought to be created.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. That is a request simply from the field officer of Mr. LONG. That is a request singly from the first singly the Bureau of Forestry. I should like the Senator to state what action was taken by the Department on that request.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will be glad to give it. This was the report and request of Mr. Cox, who had been sent there as an expert from the Bureau of Forestry. Acting upon this report the Department of Agriculture requested the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw the land from allotment, which was done—4,000,000 acres—coming right bang up against the east side of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road, running north and south through it.

To show further how improvidently this reserve was created, the attention of the Secretary of the Interior was called to the probable fact that by withdrawing this land and centering it in Government ownership a dormant land grant of alternate sections 10 miles on the east side of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road would immediately attach. It never had entered into the consideration of either of the Departments to look far enough into the status of that land to ascertain whether or not there was a probability that if the land passed into Government ownership that land grant would revive and attach.

The attention of the Secretary of the Interior was called to the fact, and he afterwards modified his order, throwing out of the withdrawal that portion of the land to which the land grant might have attached, and reducing the area of the reserve to 2,000,000 acres; and there it stands to-day, awaiting action by Congress. The inquiry was made, "If Congress fails to act, what will then be your position? Will you then release the land for allotment?" The Secretary declined to answer the ques-

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. With pleasure.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator understand that Congress has already directed the Secretary of the Interior to allot these lands to the Indians?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The law providing for the allotment of the lands in the Cherokee and Chickasaw nations directed that as soon as practicable this land shall be allotted until all the allotments shall have been completed.

Mr. FULTON. Does not the allotment then have to stop in

Mr. FULTON. Does not the allotment then have to stop in order to have the land withdrawn?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. He stopped the allotment. He declined to receive any more allotments, and declined to accept the allotments that had already been made, although so far as the allotments that had already been made were concerned he has since rescinded his order. But no new allotments are allowed there to this day.

Mr. President, under these considerations and under an authority administered in this manner, is it any wonder that the people who are interested, who rest under the weight of it, complain, and, as has been said in the Senate, consume three or four days in useless debate? Mr. President, it is not useless debate, if it calls the attention of the Senate to the fact that people are having their political rights hampered, that the welfare of their States is stopped, and if this bill should become a law it would be everlastingly stopped.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to another fact, and that is the proposition in the bill that there shall be released from the provisions of the public-land laws in effect a great area, more than twice or three times as much as that already in forest reserves. The proposition is to turn three or four hun-dred million acres of the grazing lands of this Republic in the arid region into the hands of the Bureau of Forestry or the Department of Agriculture, which, of course, is the same, as far as the purposes of this discussion are concerned, and to give the head of it the absolute control over that great area; that he shall say whose cattle shall pasture upon it; that he shall say whether or not they shall fence the public domain; that he shall say how much shall be charged each man for the privilege of grazing upon the public domain; in other words, that he shall be the complete autocrat of all the grazing grounds in the United States west of the one hundredth meridian,

Mr. President, I leave to the imagination of the Senate what would be the result of that. A saving clause was sought to be put in by the Senator from Kansas by which the rights of the settlers, if anybody should settle there, might be preserved.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAW.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming will kindly suspend. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Senate resolution 214—
Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; House bill 13566 is the unfinished business. It was taken up yesterday by a vote of the Senate, and it was under consideration at the time of adjournment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 13566) to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor] will allow me, I wish to call up a joint resolution which has to go to the House

Mr. PROCTOR. I yield for that purpose if it will give rise to no debate.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the votes by which the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered. I wish to move an amendment.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In line 6 I move to strike out the word "six" and to insert the word "seven," which is to correct a mistake in the date, changing it to 1907; and I also move to add at the end of the joint resolution the words "or 1910."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming will proceed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Assuming that the stock grazers of the West have right of common over the public domain, and assuming that no charge shall be imposed for grazing, is the Senator of the opinion that the Government should exercise no control whatever over it, with a view of preventing overgrazing and the destruction of foliage, and with a view of preventing conflict between rival stock growers, each endeavoring to take possession of the entire range, and consequent bloodshed? If the Senator thinks such a system of control advisable, I should be glad if he would state what he would regard as the wisest system.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, Mr. President, the Senator is propounding a question here which the wise men of the West have been thinking and working on for years and years, and they have not yet reached what all of them believe to be a wise solution. I should not attempt on the spur of the moment to answer a question of that sort with any degree of assurance to myself that it was right or with any degree of assurance to anybody else.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I call the Senator's attention to certain resolutions which I saw some days ago, purporting to have been passed by the Stock Grazers' Association of the West, approving of some system of control and of permit. I do not know that they went so far as to approve the system of a charge for

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, in view of the last suggestion, I want to say that I do not want my attitude to be misunderstood. I am not representing the views of the stockmen especially, either the cattlemen or the sheepnten. Their interests, of course, should be fully considered. But what I am trying to say is that irrespective of the good that may accrue to any particular class of people, great injury would be in-flicted upon the country by this proposed grazing law. Some of the stockmen are in favor of it, and some of them are against it. For myself I own not, neither am I interested in an acre of this public domain or in a single animal that could be pastured thereupon; but I am interested, and I have a great and abiding interest, in the future welfare and in the settlement and the development of my State.

There are stockmen in the West who, if this bill should be come a law, would hail it with gladdest acclaim. Those are the stockmen who for years have monopolized great bodies of our public lands and have them even now under illegal fences. Word has gone forth that no action will be taken against those illegal fences until the 1st of April—that the fences may be allowed to stand until the 1st of April—that the fences may be allowed to stand until that time. Word comes from the Bureau of Forestry that the fences will not be interfered with until the 4th of March. What does that mean? It means that when the 4th of March comes and this bill shall become a law, the fences shall remain and the great areas inclosed with them withdrawn from public settlement and used for the benefit of the man who has already illegally fenced them, if he cares to make a lease. That is what it means, and it is a warning to the stockmen that if this bill does not become a law they must take down their fences. What sane man with a fence upon the public domain, with a limited consciousness of the right-eousness of public duty, would not favor this bill under those circumstances?

I say I am not chiefly concerned about the stockmen. I am intensely concerned about the future of my State. This amendment, if passed, would absolutely prohibit, in my judgment, the further settlement of men upon the public domain.

As I started to say, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long] sought to break the effect of the amendment as much as possible when he insisted that some provision should be put in for the settlement of these lands by homesteaders. Of course, the amendment says that homesteaders, notwithstanding the lease, can go upon the land to make homestead entries

On that particular point I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the proposition as to whether it would not be a very sultry life that a poor homesteader would lead within the in-closure of a great stock company. He would be an unwelcome guest at most. Would be not have a sort of torrid life even with the lessee acting within the legal limits of his right?

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do.

Mr. LONG. I do not understand the position of the Senator in referring to the amendment, which, I understand, is not up for consideration in the Senate. Does the Senator believe that the language is not sufficiently broad to protect the rights of homesteaders or does he take the position that it is impossible by legislation to protect the rights of the homesteaders in such legislation as this?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think it is impossible that the Government can lease ten or twenty or thirty or forty or fifty or one hundred thousand acres of land to any man to inclose and properly protect a settler within such inclosure. I think it is utterly impossible to say that a settler can maintain himself in opposition to the great landholder under such circumstances. It is a practical impossibility. In this amendment it is indeed provided that he shall have the right, notwithstanding the lease, to graze upon the adjacent land. But to graze what, Mr. President? His work teams and milch cows only—in the language of the amendment, his stock used for domestic purposes.

Mr. LONG. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that in drawing or in modifying the proviso it was my purpose, so far as legislation could, not to prevent the homesteading of the

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the amendment will reach as far as any amendment could on a proposition of this sort, but I believe the practical effect of any leasing proposition such as is proposed, or any other, is to absolutely stop settlement upon the public land by the homesteader or resident. I think, in the very nature of things, it is impossible for a man to make his home under such conditions.

Now, Mr. President, the result of this, if adopted-and I do not believe it will be adopted—will be to put half a continent under the landlordism of a single man.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. With pleasure.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thoroughly agree with what the Senator says on this question. I wish to ask him if he does not think the excluding of the homesteaders would not exclude from the ranges the small cattle owners and the small sheep owners. In other words, would not the result be to put into the hands of great cattle owners a monopoly of the ranges? example, in my own State there are very large numbers of villages where each inhabitant owns five, ten, or fifteen head of cattle and twenty, twenty-five, or fifty head of sheep. They are in the habit of employing somebody to take charge of their little flocks and take them out upon the public domain and pasture them in that way. It would be impracticable for those people to take leases, and the final result of it would be to create a monopoly in the hands of the big cattle owners and big sheep owners. I ask the Senator if he does not think that would be the result of it?

CLARK of Wyoming. I think it would. I think it would be the inevitable result of it. I think the inevitable result would be that all grazing privilege would go to the highest bidder in the end.

Mr. President-Mr. WARREN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from Wyoming yield to his colleague?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. With pleasure.
Mr. WARREN. Noting the remarks made by the Senator from Utah, I should like to ask my colleague whether if the plan was carried out according to the letter from the President, which states what should be done, and an amendment of that kind is passed, that the apportionment should be entirely within the control of the local authorities, he thinks that would preclude the small cattleman and the small sheepmen in favor of the large ones.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In answer to my colleague, I will simply say that if I have got to take bad medicine I would rather take it at the hands of my friends than at the hands of strangers; and if there is to be any control of these ranges of course to cause the least harm, it should be by the local people. But, Mr. President, in further answer to the question of the Senator from Utah, the inevitable result under this bill would be to make the man with the longest purse the virtual proprie-tor of the public domain. And why? Because those who have analyzed the bill will have observed that all the receipts from the forests, from the great lumbering operations, from the herding operations, from the 5 cents on sheep and 25 cents on cattle, whatever they are, go not to the miscellaneous items in the Treasury of the United States, but to a special fund in the Treasury of the United States. All the grazing fees from 400,000,000 acres of land under this bill are to be turned into this special forestry fund.

Mr. President, there is a revenue from an empire going into the Treasury of the United States, not subject to the ordinary course of appropriation by legislation of the Congress, but millions and millions of dollars going into this special fund to be checked out upon the personal request of the Secretary of Agriculture and the director of this Bureau. The purpose of the director of this Bureau or the Forester at all times, of course, would be to swell that fund to the greatest possible amount. If he believed that there existed a necessity for further expenditures, he could-

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the yield to the Senator from Nebraska? Does the Senator from Wyoming

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly. It was the Senator's bill that I was talking about, I think,

Mr. BURKETT. I thought the Senator was away from the grazing amendment; but I am interested in asking the Senator this question, because so many have been hammering at this Forester for the reason that he collects this money and spends He has been assaulted here four or five days because he had been collecting money somewhere and spending it. I got the law and looked it up, and I find that that is exactly what the law tells him to do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is exactly what we do not want the law any longer to tell him to do.

Mr. BURKETT. Let me ask the Senator if it is not a fact that he and several other Senators now present were here when that law was passed?

Mr, CLARK of Wyoming. I expect likely I was, done very many foolish things in public and private life.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not want to have the Senator take it that way, but what I am trying to get at is that it is a matter which can be changed, and I understand it has been changed by the amendment, by which the money must be turned into the Treasury. Why the Forester should be abused for collecting money and doing exactly what he has been told by legislation to do I can not understand.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It has been far from my intention to abuse the Forester. On the contrary, I have the highest opinion of that gentleman.

If I have talked to any purpose, it has been to point out the danger to certain parts of the country in giving to any man the power that is vested by this bill in the Forester, and to call attention to the disastrous results to the hoped-for growth of the West if this amendment should become a law.

Mr. BURKETT. Does not the Senator think that the unfortunate, or at least to the Senate unsatisfactory, method of hand-ling this fund has been used rather to hammer the whole Forestry Bureau and to create a prejudice against it in the same spirit that will destroy its effectiveness?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not think so. I do not think any intelligent public criticism of the administration of any office is detrimental to the welfare of the office or bureau. It has certainly been far from my notion to antagonize the Bureau of Forestry, because, as I said in the beginning, if there are any people on the face of the earth who are interested in the proper administration of that policy, it is the people of the section of the country which I, in part, on this floor represent.

Mr. BURKETT. Just one question and I will not interrupt Since the Senator referred to this amendment, which was originally my bill, I will say that of course that was put in because the Senate or the Congress in its wisdom hitherto had provided that system for the forest reserves in question, and hence this bill was drawn to conform with what the action had been heretofore. Since the Congress has changed its plans—and I am in hearty accord with that—of turning the money into the Treasury and taking it out on specifications and appropriations, then the provision ought to be changed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I have talked very much longer than I intended on this proposition. In fact, I only intended addressing myself to the observation made by the Senator from Wisconsin on Tuesday evening, I think. But I can not refrain from expressing again, Mr. President, the fear which the people of the West, or at least some of them, have of the result of this legislation.

Under the various withdrawals proposed in this bill there will be substantially no lands left in the public domain upon which a man could enter save only the lands which might be entered for precious metals. In my State there have been untold acres withdrawn for forest reserves. There have been many acres withdrawn for oil lands, and there have been in addition, withdrawn within the last year 16,000,000 acres of coal lands from private entry. As to the wisdom of these Executive actions it is not my purpose here to speak. Of the can speak-that there is a wholesale fear abroad through the State that unless some change is made or some halt called development must stop and irreparable injury may be worked.

Mr. President, to show that the matter is of live considera-tion I have here, and will ask to insert in the Record, a joint resolution recently passed by the legislature of my State, which has now adjourned. I ask to have the joint resolution incorporated in the RECORD.

VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the resolution referred to by the Senator will be inserted in the House joint resolution in opposition to any proposed change in the Federal land laws or in the administration of said laws, or to any regulations that will operate to the injury of the State of Wyoming, retard its development, hinder its growth, or interfere with the prosperity of its people. February 8, introduced, read first time, ordered printed, and referred to committee No. 14, on lands and irrigation.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

perity of its people. February 8, introduced, read first time, ordered printed, and referred to committee No. 14, on lands and irrigation. Whereas 60 per cent of the lands of Wyoming are unoccupied except for the grazing of live stock; and Whereas conditions in Wyoming were never more prosperous than at present, and it should be our aim to maintain same; and Whereas the relations between the various live-stock interests were never more peaceful and satisfactory than now; and under present methods of conducting the live-stock industry, necessitating, as it does, winter feeding, the irrigable lands are being reclaimed and made to produce their full capacity of hay and small grains, thereby offering inducements to settlers and dry farmers and creating a home market for the fruits of their labors which will grow rapidly under a continuation of these conditions, thereby almost doubling the stock-carrying capacity of the arid ranges, and thus increasing to a marked degree the taxable wealth of the State; and Whereas the influx of home builders, homesteaders, and settlers under our irrigation system was never greater or as steady as at present and the prospect for the future was never brighter in our young Commonwealth; the Government is constructing two great irrigation systems in this State and soon the farmer and home builder will be invited to come in large numbers and settle the lands under these enterprises; and Whereas experiments in dry farming have proved conclusively that a large percentage of arid lands heretofore regarded as fit only for the limited grazing of live stock can be reclaimed by the dry-farming methods and made to produce bountiful crops of hay and grains common to this climate, and efforts are now being made to settle these lands by this plan, which has already proved successful: Therefore,

Bands by this plan, which has already proved successint. Increases be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the ninth legislature of the State of Wyoming, the senate concurring, That we view with alarm any proposed change that will in any way injure our prosperity, restrict immigration, keep out the home builder, homesteader, and settler, retard the growth of our young State, handicap work upon the great irrigation enterprises of the Government and private capital, restrict or destroy the home market of the small ranchman, dry farmer, and settler, who depends upon the live-stock industry for an outlet for his hay, small grains, and produce, or that will in any way interfere with the present peaceful relations between stockmen; and

Be it further resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, and to Members of the Congress of the United States with the request that same be given careful consideration before entering upon any plan having for its object the leasing or control of the range lands of Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, in the preamble of

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, in the preamble of the resolution the bill under consideration is specifically referred to. As I am informed by a telegram from the governor, the resolution passed the legislature almost unanimously. But I wish to call attention-Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to interrupt the Senator, to what bill does the Senator refer—the agricultural appropriation bill

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Burkett bill.

Mr. LONG. Or the leasing proposition?
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The leasing proposition.
Mr. LONG. The leasing proposition of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; and now for a moment I want to call the attention of those who have been interested in the great irrigation legislation to the effect that will inevitably follow if any such plan as his shall finally be adopted. lieve that a few years ago was worked out in the two bodies of Congress the greatest piece of constructive legislation since the close of the war, namely, the reclamation act, whereby the power of the Government was placed behind the great irrigation scheme; whereby they devoted to the building of great reservoirs and canals to turn the water out upon the arid land all the proceeds of public-land sales within the borders of the States except 5 per cent, I believe, which goes to the State.

Mr. President, there is in that fund an insufficient amount at the present time to complete the construction of the works already approved. In my judgment, the leasing of the land, the withdrawal of the coal land, the repeal of the timber and stone act, all taken together, will leave not a dollar in that irrigation fund, and the great constructive piece of legislation that is working great and untold benefit to the western country will become a dead letter, as though it had never been placed upon the statute books of the nation. You are diverting the revenue which should go into the irrigation fund to the Forestry Service for the further extension of its already great power. Mr. President, against the legislation proposed in this leasing amendment, against the enormous power over the prosperity and development of my State given to one man by this bill I now and ever shall most solemnly protest.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not wish to take up much time in this discussion. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has discussed some propositions in connection with the general subject which, with due deference to him, I think are hardly germane to the real subject of the debate, at least so far as I care to pay attention to it. I know little about the with-drawal of lands by the Secretary of the Interior and the rec-ommendation that a forest reserve be established in the Indian Territory

I want to say this, however, that I do not believe since the foundation of this Government there has been in its service a man of more unimpeachable integrity or higher devotion to the public service than the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Hitchcock. He may have made mistakes—we all make mistakes—but his purpose to conserve the interests within his charge, in my mind, can never be subject to any just impeachment. I think he has rendered service to the country in a position, which is a very disagreeable one in many ways, which will not be excelled by any successor and which has not been excelled by any predecessor. As to his power to arrest allotments in the Indian Territory, in my opinion, something may be said on both sides; but I do not care to discuss that. I do not intend, either, to discuss the proposition in this bill which has been so elaborately and eloquently and earnestly discussed by the Senator from Wyoming, to cover into the forest reserves 400,000,000 acres—I think the Senator said that was the amount—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is so estimated by the Bureau.
Mr. SPOONER. Of grazing land. I suppose it is in the power of any one Senator to eliminate that from the bill. have not studied that subject and I do not intend to spend any time in discussing it.

Mr. President, at one time, in regard to the forest-reserve policy, I felt very much as some of the Senators from the far Western States seem to feel. I remember once riding through a part of Wyoming on a hunting expedition, and meeting several part of Wyoming on a nunting expedition, and meeting several wagons filled with people, men, women, and children, with a little bunch of stock, who had traveled all the way from Alabama to occupy and make homes in a valley within 5 miles of where I met them, upon land which when they started from Alabama was subject to homestead entry, but which a few days before they reached the point where I met them had ceased to be subject to such entry, because of an Executive proclamation withdrawing the lands from entry for forest-reserve purposes. So it had passed absolutely beyond their reach. It seemed to me a harsh thing in its operation, not only to those people, but it seemed to me a very great detriment to the people of the West to have arable lands withdrawn permanently from entry, from the reach of the home seeker because of Executive proclamations.

I think nearly everyone here has a higher opinion of the general forest-reserve policy than he entertained at that time. think some of my colleagues here who were violently opposed to the whole policy at that time have come to see that underlying it is great wisdom, large public interest, not only in its relation to the whole country, but especially to the States within the region in which the forest reserves lie. But, Mr. President, it is not true to-day, as it was in those years, that the forest reserve shuts out the settler, debars the home seeker from land fit for agricultural uses, as I understand the law. The law—and Senators will correct me if it has been changed—the act of June 11, 1906, opens the arable and agricultural lands within forest reservations to homestead entry.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SPOONER. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. FULTON. No. I want to make a suggestion in connection with that, if the Senator has no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. I have none. Mr. FULTON. While it is true that lands which are chiefly valuable for agriculture are permitted to be entered under the homestead law within forest reserves, nevertheless I think the Senator will see this: In the first place, one moving with his family in a forest reserve goes where there can be no real community of association, where there are no roads and no way of getting roads, except such as the Government constructs—the county has not the power to build roads in the reserves-where there is no means of having schools and other facilities as they have outside. So it practically bars a man from going in there unless he is willing to dissociate himself entirely from all community life. Further, the Bureau holds—I do not know what the Agricultural Department holds, but I know what the Forester holds—that land is only chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes when it has no timber on it or practically none. If it has timber on it, then it is chiefly valuable for timber. know they hold that, because I have applied to them for their construction. The Senator does know, and must know, from experience that some of the very best land in the Middle Western States and some in the Eastern States is land that has been cleared of forests. It is so in the West and is so in the East and Middle West.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator's argument is an argument altogether against forest reserves.

Mr. FULTON. No. Mr. President. Mr. SPOONER. Pretty much.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me, I do not mean that. I am not opposed to forest reserves under proper restric-There is a vast amount of timber land that by reason of the topography of the country in which the timber grows is unsuited for farms. That land, I believe, should be put into forest reserves. I think it is a wise policy to do it. But there is a vast portion of land covered with timber that is, nevertheless, chiefly valuable in the long reach of time for agriculture.

Mr. HEYBURN rose.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator want to interrupt me? Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin with regard to the assertion that the land within a forest reserve is open to settlement under the homestead laws. While nominally it is open to homestead, it is not subject to the homestead law at all. The settler has no right to go upon the land until he has first made an application to the Department, representing that he has found a piece of land that is agricultural in character. It is then examined. If upon the report of the examiner the Secretary shall find that that land is of that character, the settler may go upon it, not as a homesteader, because a homesteader goes upon it without having to pay for it-he earns it by living there-but in this case he does not.

Under the provisions of the law-and I have given them close attention-he must first have it surveyed by metes and bounds, if it has not been surveyed according to the rectangular system of public surveys. He must do that at his own expense. expense amounts to quite a large sum of money. If a settler were to find a piece of ground agricultural in character in the midst of some of our forest reserves, it would probably cost him from three to five hundred dollars to have it surveyed, because there are great distances intervening and expensive conditions. He must have that surveyed, not as a homesteader procures his land, but surveyed upon the ground, and those notes of survey go to the surveyor-general for the State or Territory in which the land is located, and they must be submitted to the surveyor-general for approval. The settler pays all of those expenses. Then, if the survey is approved, he then lives upon that land under the homestead law, but that is in no sense a homestead. He may live there alone, as has been suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton], a lifetime or for a generation without ever having a neighbor.

So that these areas are not subject to settlement under the homestead laws at all, but under a special law, which is so burdensome that the ordinary immigrant can not take advantage which reads:

Mr. SPOONER. I used the word "homestead" from the law, which reads:

That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, and he is hereby authorized, upon application or otherwise, to examine and ascertain as to the location and extent of lands within permanent or temporary forest reserves, except the following counties in the State of California, Inyo, Tulare, Kern, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Orange, Riverside, and San Diego, which are chiefly valuable for agriculture, and which, in his opinion, may be occupied for agricultural purposes without injury to the forest reserves, and which are not needed for public purposes, and may list and describe the same by metes and bounds, or otherwise, and file the lists and descriptions with the Secretary of the Interior, with the request that the said lands be opened to entry in accordance with the provisions of the homestead laws and this act.

Upon the filing of any such list or description the Secretary of the Interior shall declare the said lands open to homestead settlement and entry in tracts not exceeding 160 acres in area and not exceeding 1 mile in length, at the expiration of sixty days from the filing of the list in the land office of the district within which the lands are located, during which period the said list or description shall be prominently posted in the land office and advertised for a period of not less than four weeks in one newspaper of general circulation published in the county in which the lands are situated.

Provided further. That any entryman desiring to obtain patent to any lands described by metes and bounds entered by him under the provisions of this act shall, within five years of the date of making settlement, file, with the required proof of residence and cultivation, a plat and field notes of the lands entered.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that is the correlative of the ordinary provision of the homestead law, that after five years the settler may apply for a patent; but I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that that law provides that these things may be done subject to the rules and regulations of the Department, and I am speaking with those rules and regulations in my mind. I am reading them into the law. The Senator will find that that law is of no practical value to the immigrant at all. It may be to a class of well-to-do settlers, if they find suitable land and they think they can afford to incur the expense necessary to be incurred in order to avail themselves of it; but to the people who go in the white-covered wagons—and we see trains and trains of them in our country yet, passing through our roads and our cities-to them it has no value whatever. It is a discriminatory law by virtue of its terms.

Mr. SPOONER. A great many people go in white covered wagons and hunt for land who are not paupers by any means.
Mr. HEYBURN. That is true.
Mr. SPOONER. This law can not be very well changed. It was not the intention of this law that lands chiefly valuable for forest purposes should be opened to homestead settlement; it was intended by this law that land not chiefly valuable for forest purposes should be open to homestead settlement.

If the regulations of the Department are unjust, then it is the right of Congress to change them. I am speaking of the policy of the Government. This is a beneficial statute, which ought to be liberally construed to advance the great purposes which led to its enactment, without opening the door to fraud against the policy which led to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that it is a beneficial act to the extent that it partially corrects

Mr. SPOONER. How would the Senator correct it all?
Mr. HEYBURN. I would allow land fit for home making to be opened for settlement.
Mr. SPOONER. That is to say, wherever there is a tract of land owned by the Government, covered by timber worth preserving, that should be open to settlement, if after the timber is removed, the land would be capable of agriculture, opened to homesteads? That, Mr. President, is very nearly for all practical purposes hostility to the policy of forest reserves.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me a further interruption, as was stated by the Senator from Wyoming, one of the difficulties that we have encountered in our effort to seek a proper adjustment of this question is that we are always confronted with the statement that we are hostile to the preservation of the forest. Mr. President, I am not, and I think that is-I do not charge the Senator with being unfair, but I think it is an unfair argument to assume or state that we are antagonistic to a wise system for the preservation of forests merely because we object to the present system.

The law, as Congress originally enacted it, had it been intelligently expressed—which it was not, for it does not mean anything—exempted mineral and agricultural land from its operation. It was the intention then, as the discussion in the record of Congress will show, that forest reserves should be created upon the mountains and at the heads of streams, and out of the way of settlement; but since this Forestry Bureau-and I am not intending to criticise harshly any individual connected with it-but as soon as they found what a grasp of power it gave them, they immediately sought to enlarge that scope of power, and to go down into the valleys, until now they are just as apt to create a forest reserve in a valley as they are on a mountain.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do, with the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER.

Very well.

N. I have prepared an amendment which is Mr. PATTERSON. apropos of the identical question which the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Wisconsin are discussing.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not permitted by the rules of the Senate to yield to the Senator to offer his amendment.

wr. PATTERSON. Try it and see.

Nr. REVERIDGE. We on this side of the Chamber can not hear what is being said.

Mr. SPOONER. I have stated that I am not permitted by the rules to yield to the Senator from Colorado to offer an amendment. I am, however, permitted to yield to him to state what his amendment is, and I will do so.

Mr. PATTERSON. My amendment is as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause all lands heretofore set apart as forest reserves to be classified as near as may be into forest lands, agricultural lands, and mineral lands, and that all agricultural and mineral lands that are not also in fact forest lands shall be excluded from forest reserves, and shall be open to settlement and purchase under existing public laws, and hereafter, before a forest reserve shall be made, such classifications of lands shall be made, and only forest lands shall be included within them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question for information?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

I merely wanted to ask the Senator from Mr. BEVERIDGE. Colorado a question for information as to his amendment, if he is going to discuss it. The question is, Would that amendment exclude from a forest reserve a mountain valley or a mountain exclude from a forest reserve a mountain meadow which was all surrounded by forests?

Mr. PATTERSON. It would take up too much time for me answer the Senator's question. I do not wish to intrude upon the time of the Senator from Wisconsin, who has the floor, but I expect, before the debate closes, to discuss the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I should regret if the Senator from Idaho feels I have cast upon him by my observations any unjust imputation. What I intended to say was that the argument of the Senator was hostile to the real, substantial policy of forest reservation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, will the Senator—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should be glad if the Senator would yield right there

Mr. SPOONER. I will. Mr. HEYBURN. I can not conceive that that is a fair deduction to be drawn from anything that I have said. It is a deduction which might be drawn from what others have said I thought and said that I had said, but not from anything that I have said.

Mr. SPOONER. I am drawing it from what the Senator said. Mr. HEYBURN. I will state in a word, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. SPOONER. I know what the Senator said. Mr. HEYBURN. I am not hostile to the preser I am not hostile to the preservation of the forests; I am not hostile to a proper policy for the preservation of forests, but I am hostile to the policy of Congress as it has been interpreted by the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, underlying, I suppose, this forest-reserve policy of Congress was the knowledge of the fact that the timber supply of the United States was rapidly disappearing.

Mr. HEYBURN. Where, may I ask the Senator, was it disappearing?

Mr. SPOONER. It was disappearing all over this country-Mr. HEYBURN.

I know, but where was it going?
As it will disappear—I will get to that—as Mr. SPOONER. it will disappear, Mr. President, with very great rapidity in the far West if there should be enacted into law the proposition of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, may I ask the Senator— Mr. SPOONER. If there is to be thrown open to entry all of the land embraced within the forest reservations which when stripped of timber would be susceptible of cultivation, there would not be very much use of a forest-reserve policy, in my opinion.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I ask the Senator a question? Mr. SPOONER. Yes. Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator says the timber would dis-

Where would it go? appear.

Mr. SPOONER. I will tell you where I think it would go. I think it would go just as it went in my State, where homesteaders settled upon land which was covered with magnificent timber, land which when stripped of timber could be utilized for farms, and the timber went into the possession, at pretty low prices, of the great lumbering companies which had the capital and the outfit to cut it and log it and run it down the streams

Mr. HEYBURN. What did the great lumber companies do with the timber?

Mr. SPOONER. Some great lumber companies sold the timber they bought of the homesteaders and sold the timber they cut off Government land, and I will venture the opinion that enough timber has been cut off Government land within the last hundred years to pay the national debt over and over again, and I will venture another opinion, that by reason of the slothful and neglectful cutting enough timber has been destroyed by fire, generated by the carelessness of those lumbermen, to pay the national debt several times over.

Mr. HEYBURN. But will the Senator permit me to ask a question? What did the lumber companies do with the timber they cut in their mills?

Mr. SPOONER. They sold it.

For what purpose? Where is it now? Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. SPOONER. What do you buy timber for when you buy it?

Mr. HEYBURN. Where is the timber now? Mr. SPOONER. What they did do and what they would do would be this: They would buy, as long as it was possible to do it, timber from the homesteader, saving their own for higher prices, awaiting the appreciation in value at a later date and there would not be much timber left in the region. It is nearly all gone in my State. It is nearly all gone in Michigan. It is nearly all gone in most of the Eastern States; and I call my State an Eastern State from the Senator's standpoint.

The Government being the proprietor of this land had a perfect right to adopt a policy that would conserve its timber supply, just as the Government has a right to adopt a policy of conserving the coal supply which underlies the surface of land owned by the Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator a question here as to the right of dominion. Is it the Senator's belief that the Government alone may regulate the use of its lands within

Mr. SPOONER. It is the Senator's belief that when a Territory containing Government land is admitted into the Union the Government's ownership of that land, its power of disposition, its proprietorship over that land, remain absolutely undiminished and unaffected.

Mr. HEYBURN. And the State has no power to regulate its

Mr. SPOONER. The State has no power to tax it—Mr. HEYBURN. I admit that.

Mr. SPOONER. Because the power to tax involves the power to destroy.

Mr. HEYBURN. How about the right to use it? Mr. SPOONER. It has no right to use it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Or to regulate its use in any way by its

Mr. SPOONER. Or to regulate its use by the citizens of the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator allow me to call his atten-

Mr. SPOONER. No; the Senator can do that later. I want to get through

Mr. HEYBURN. I have a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on that question.
Mr. SPOONER. What is it?

Mr. HEYBURN. I would call the attention of the Senator to the case of Bacon v. Walker et al., decided February 4, this month, by the United States Supreme Court, in which that very question is settled.

Mr. SPOONER. Let me see the case. Mr. HEYBURN. I have marked port I have marked portions of it, but the Senator may not, without close attention, be able to-

Mr. SPOONER. What was the nature of the case?
Mr. HEYBURN. The question was as to the right of the legislature of a State to define the rights to the use of the public domain within the State, and it is decided in that case. court held that the act of the legislature defining the use of the public lands within the State by the citizens of the State is valid legislation, and that it is competent for the legislature of the State to control the use of the public lands within the State. That is the law of any class.

Mr. SPOONER. Who was the plaintiff in error?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator has the decision. The court follow the decision of the supreme court of Idaho. It is what is known as the "2-mile-limit law."

Mr. SPOONER (reading):

We think, therefore, that the statutes of Idaho are not open to the objection that they take the property of plaintiff in error—and pass to the consideration of the charge that they make an unconstitutional discrimination against the sheep industry.

A decision of neither of those questions, I think, would involve the conclusion which the Senator announced.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have tried to direct the Senator's attention to the part of the decision that does cover it.

Mr. SPOONER. I will yield to the Senator to do that. Mr. HEYBURN. I will do it by and by, unless the Senator wants me to do it now.

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator to do that.
Mr. HEYBURN. There has been much discussion upon this question this morning-

Mr. SPOONER. I merely yield to the Senator to read from

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not going to make a speech. wished to direct the attention of Senators who have entered into the discussion of these questions to the decision. After disposing of the legal question arising under the amendment of the Constitution prohibiting the taking of property without just compensation, the court held that the taking of a man's right to participate in the unlimited use of the public domain was not the taking of property in violation of the constitutional amendment. Then comes the question of the right of the public upon the public domain.

Does the herding or grazing of sheep necessarily, and because of its unwarrantable character, work an injury to the public? And, if dangerous in any degree whatever, are the other classes which are omitted and in effect excepted entirely free from such danger, or do such exceptions tend to reduce the general danger?

I am merely leading up to it.

Contemplating the law in the aspect expressed in these questions, counsel are unable to see in it anything but unreasonable and arbitrary discrimination. This view of the power of the State, however, is too narrow. That power is not confined, as we have said, to the suppression of what is offensive, disorderly, or unsanitary. It extends to so dealing with the conditions which exist in the State as to bring out of them the greatest welfare of its people. This is the principle of the cases which we have cited.

But the statutes have investigated.

we have cited.

But the statutes have justification on the grounds which plaintiff in error urges as determinative, and on those grounds they were sustained by the supreme court of the State. They were deliberate enactments, made necessary by and addressed to the conditions which existed. They first (1875) had application only to three counties, while Idaho was a Territory. They were subsequently extended to two other counties and were made general in 1887. They were continued in force by the State constitution. (Sweet v. Ballentyne, supra.) The court said, in the latter case:

This is what the supreme court of Idaho stated, and it is affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States:

It is a matter of public history in this State that conflicts between sheep owners and cattlemen and settlers were of frequent occurrence, resulting in violent breaches of the peace. It is also a matter of public history of the State that sheep are not only able to hold their own on the public ranges with other live stock, but will in the end drive other stock off the range, and that the herding of sheep upon certain territory is an appropriation of it almost as fully as if it were actually inclosed by fences, and this is especially true with reference to cattle. The legislature did not deem it necessary to forbid the running at large of sheep altogether, recognizing the fact that there are in the State large areas of land uninhabited where sheep can range without interfering with the health or subsistence of settlers or interrupting the public peace. The fact was also recognized by the legislature that, in order to make the settlement of our small isolated valleys possible, it was necessary to provide some protection to the settler against the innumerable bands of sheep grazing in this State.

That is the decision of the supreme court of Idaho. The

That is the decision of the supreme court of Idaho. The Supreme Court of the United States says:

And the court pointed out that it was not the purpose or effect of the statutes to make discrimination between sheep owners and owners of other kinds of stock, but to secure equality of enjoyment and use of the public domain to settlers and cattle owners with sheep owners.

Recognizing the right of the State to govern the public domain within its borders and the use to be made of it. I resume reading reading:

To defeat the beneficent objects of the statutes, it was said, by holding their provisions unconstitutional would make of the lands of the State "one immense sheep pasture." And further: "The owners of sheep do not permit them to roam at will, but they are under the immediate control of herders, who have shepherd dogs with them, and wherever they graze they take full possession of the range as effectually as if the lands were fenced. * * It is a matter of common observation and experience that sheep eat the herbage closer to the ground than cattle or horses do, and, their hoofs being sharp, they devastate and kill the growing vegetation wherever they graze for any considerable time. In the language of one of the witnesses in this case: 'Just as soon as a band of sheep passes over everything disappears the same as if fire passing over it.' It is a part of the public history of this State that the industry of raising cattle has been largely destroyed by the encroachments of innumerable bands of sheep. Cattle will not graze, and will not thrive, upon lands where sheep are grazed to any great extent."

That is quoted from the testimony of a witness.

These remarks require no addition. They exhibit the conditions which existed in the State, the cause and purpose of the statutes which are assailed, and vindicate them from the accusation of being an arbitrary and unreasonable discrimination against the sheep industry.

If that is not a recognition of the right of the legislature to control the use of the public domain, it is not anything.

Mr. SPOONER. That was a police regulation of the State of Idaho, operative upon its citizens; and I discover nothing what-

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator will discover more in it. Mr. SPOONER. I am perfectly satisfied without reading it that I will not discover anything in it holding that the United States Government as an owner of land in the State of Idaho may not, if it chooses, forbear to sell it, forbear to lease it. or may not, if it chooses, against any power on earth to prevent it, in the State or out, fence it and exclude people and cattle and sheep from it. It is not for one moment to be imputed to the Supreme Court of the United States that they hold that when Territory is admitted into the Union as a State, in which State the Government of the United States is the owner of a vast tract of land, the Government of the United States has not the same control over that land within certain limitations that it had before the Territory was admitted.

I agree that if the State enacts a game law, that being an exercise of the police power, the Government of the United States may not enact—operative upon its land—a different game law, because that would be two sovereignties possibly coming in conflict over a subject bearing upon the people of the State and within the cognizance and jurisdiction of the State.

But does the Senator from Idaho contend that the Government may not exclude sheep from its lands in Idaho if it chooses'

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SPOONER. I do. Mr. HEYBURN. The The Supreme Court specifically divides the question between that which comes within the police regulation and that which is considered under the power of the State to regulate the occupation of public lands.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator contend that the Congress of the United States may not exclude by law cattle and sheep from the Government lands in Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I so contend, because they have a compact with the State of Idaho which makes it unlawful for them to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the compact?
Mr. HEYBURN. The compact that admitted the State of Idaho upon the same basis as other States were admitted to Mr. SPOONER. No State ever was admitted into the Union in which the United States owned lands where the Government of the United States sank as a proprietor below the citizen proprietor to my knowledge.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will examine the act admitting the State of Idaho and others, he will find that Congress discriminated between the character of public lands that were open to the public and to settlement and lands that were held by the Government for a specific purpose-

Mr. SPOONER. Oh. Mr. HEYBURN. And it required us under the enabling act to concede to the Government only the absolute jurisdiction over the lands held for governmental purposes. Mr. SPOONER. If the Government owns a great range in Idaho and the Congress does not act and the cattle and the sheep of Idaho may wander over it, then an act of Idaho binding upon its citizens goes all over the State, of course. But I am talking about the proprietary power.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's line of thought.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to get through; that is all.
Mr. FULTON. I desire to ask a question.
Mr. SPOONER. I yield.
Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator contend that if the State we will say, requires lands to be fenced, in order that it shall be unlawful for stock to range upon the lands of another, the General Government may, as regards its lands, say that stock roaming at large may not trespass upon the Government lands or go upon the Government lands to graze, even though the Government lands are not fenced, thereby changing entirely the policy of the State in that regard? In other words, if other proprietors were required to fence, would not the Government be required to fence?

Mr. SPOONER. Or otherwise the cattle could go over the

Mr. FULTON. That is all I contend.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not contended otherwise.
Mr. FULTON. I did not understand the Senator did, but I wanted to understand clearly what he did contend.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not contended otherwise. It is on the same principle as the game law, exactly. The game law of a State which regulates hunting in the State and the killing of game applies to those who are permitted to go on the public land to hunt and in the Government forests to hunt. am contending for is that the Government owns its lands just as a citizen in the State owns his lands.

Mr. FULTON. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. It may sell that land or it may keep it-

Mr. FULTON. I fully agree with the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. According to the judgment of Congress as to the public interest.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——
Mr. SPOONER. I wish the Senator would pardon me., He will have "his day." I do not want to spend the whole day on this question.

Mr. HEYBURN. But when a statement is made, if it is not answered, it passes out of one's mind.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the Senator make a memorandum of it and speak later, if he will.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. I like to be interrupted; but I have some mercy for the Senate, when I think of it.

The Government may lease its lands or not, as it chooses. The Government may fence its lands if it chooses. ernment, if it chooses to employ men enough, may keep every-body off its lands, if it chooses; and the Government never, in my opinion, yielded the right to prevent it to the State of Idaho or any other State.

Now, all I started out to say was that the policy of the Government has been, so far as the forestry laws are concerned, exercising the option which it possesses to hold its timber lands in order to conserve the timber supply of the States and of the country rather than to open it, except in a qualified way, to homestead settlement. It would be opening it, as I said a few moments ago, to corporations cutting, manufacturing, and selling lumber, enabling them to save their own timber supply and obtain that for present uses from homesteaders. The average homesteader can not carry on to any large extent lumbering operations. They clear a little piece for agricultural purposes, for the erection of a cabin. They fence a little space, but for many, many years they do not go beyond that. It is a work of years, and many years ordinarily, to clear a forest farm, and, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says to me, half of it is lost.

Mr. President, that is not all. The Congress had another thing in view in establishing the forest reserves, of the utmost consequence to the people of the West, of some consequence to those States whose forests have been denuded or destroyed, and that was to conserve the water supply. That is of peculiar consequence to all the people living in the semiarid region of the country. That plays an important part in carrying to successful consummation the splendid irrigation scheme which is upon the statute book and is now being wrought out. The water supply in the far West and its conservation is of the utmost consequence. Congress had a wise purpose expressed in the act for the establishment of these reserves. The act of June 1, 1897, provides

No public forest reservation shall be established, except to improve and protect the forest within the reservation, or for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flows, and to furnish a continuous supply of timber for the use and necessities of citizens of the United States.

Without this forest-reserve policy, leaving the land open to settlement, except upon the mountain tops, where no man could live, it would not be twenty years until the State of Idaho would have supplied the East and the Middle States with her timber, and her own forests would, in the main, be gone.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator permit me to suggest something?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. Mr. HEYBURN. I looked at the question from that standpoint four years ago and three years ago. It so happened at the last session of Congress that I was ill and unable to be present. I had therefore kept in the law an exception in the interest of Idaho, providing that lumber should not be shipped by the Government out of the State of Idaho, but during my absence last winter that provision was stricken out. I am going to ask that it be inserted this year.

Mr. SPOONER. Why should it not be shipped out of the State of Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. Why should the Government ship it out of Idaho if the forests are being conserved for the future uses of the people of Idaho?

The conservation of the forests requires that Mr. SPOONER. some timber shall be cut.

Mr. HEYBURN. But let it be sold in Idaho.

Mr. SPOONER. Dead and down timber must be reizoved. A hurricane sweeps through the forest. The timber affected should be cut away, and for two reasons. It will otherwise be destroyed by worms, and worse than that, it invites a fire which may devastate the whole region. That is what conservation of the timber supply means. It means to take out those trees which ought to be taken out in the interest of the timber conservation, and it means that all cutting in the forest reserves shall be done in a manner which will not invite fires, and, second, which will not prevent reforesting.

I am not speaking without some personal knowledge of this particular phase of it. I am not speaking of the details. You may have some things to complain of, and no one would be more prompt to aid in correcting them than I. I am speaking—for there has been generalization here without limit on this subject-in support of this great national policy for the benefit of all the people, both as to the conservation of the forests and . the conservation of the water supply; and if I am not very, very, very much mistaken no people anywhere have as acute interest in it as the people who occupy these States and those who are yet to occupy these States.

I once spent six weeks in a city in the West, and during all that time I could not see a vast mountain not far away, because it was obscured by the smoke of forest fires which destroyed millions, untold millions, of property and which worked a lasting harm to people who yet are to go into those sections. So it will not do to say the Government has no right to hold its lands, if it chooses, nor will it do to say that the Government is not far-sighted and kindly in the policy which it has adopted to hold its lands and to protect its lands, and so to utilize them as to benefit the people of the localities and benefit the people of the country.

When Senators talk about the Government becoming a lumber merchant, that is incidental. The forests would be swept away by fire, spoliation, and otherwise but for these timber reservations. You would have the same experience we had, and we had forests which, I have been told, could not be exceeded anywhere in beauty—white pine—except in a part of Idaho. The met one man who had years ago ridden through the Bitter Root Mountains and down along the stream for miles and for days, and he told me that he never had seen such a forest in his life; and he had seen forests. Ten days' fire would have ruined it for miles and miles; and there is no one on earth who hungers more for such trees and who have more money with which to buy them than a great many lumber corporations. It is a legitimate business. I am not reprobating them, but there is no reason, founded in public policy, why the Government of the United States should open to homestead entry every 160-acre tract of timber land which it owns, provided that land when denuded of its trees would be arable. And that doctrine, I repeat, would simply destroy the forests and turn over-not to be too carefully exercised, either, in the public interest as to the manner of cutting and clearing-to corporations and wealthy firms the timber supply of the West.

Thousands of men who have been driven out by the destruction of our forests in Wisconsin have gone to Idaho and to other Western States to purchase timber. They are good men.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. If it pertains to this subject.
Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to suggest that those who got the most of the forests of Wisconsin and realized the benefit of them are now in Idaho. I admit that.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.
Mr. SPOONER. That makes no difference. The lumberman of Wisconsin is, I think, as good as the lumberman from Idaho or anywhere else in the world. There is no distinction to be drawn between people of different States on that basis.

The question is, Shall the Government dispose of these lands, take no care for the future either as to the water supply or the timber supply, or shall it go along in a wise, not extravagant, but liberal prosecution of the work of forest reservations? For myself, I have no doubt about it. I know it has its hardships to the people of Idaho, to the people of Montana, and to the people of other Western States. I know in a way it deters settlement. I know perfectly well the truth of what the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Idaho say, that a man with a family is loath to settle upon a piece of land to live for years without neighbors, unable to establish schools, and all that.

But, Mr. President, this law, notwithstanding, is a wise and generous law. I have traveled for days in beautiful valleys along the Snake River and other streams in Wyoming, fertile, susceptible of cultivation, which could be entered under this law. The mountains are full of valleys, some of them extensive, others less so, susceptible of cultivation and all open to settlement under existing law.

There has been no conflict, and is none between the Government and the States as to the enforcement of the game laws. I am told that the officials of the Forest-Reserve Service are under instructions to cooperate in the enforcement of the State laws in respect to game, and that they are doing it.

As to coal, we have a bill pending here which without impeding the development from the agricultural standpoint of the State in which there are deposits of coal owned by the Government, the coal can be conserved by disposing of the surface for agricultural purposes and reserving to the Government the coal and under reasonable conditions to permit its being taken

There is a wise public policy in that, Mr. President. ing it by and large I have no doubt that this forest-reserve policy as a policy is of the greatest benefit to the people of this country, and especially to the people of the far West.

Now, take the lumber business. I want to read a few words, better used than I could use them, from a statement which I asked from Mr. Pinchot. The Senator from Colorado spoke of him as a person of miraculous excellence. I am sure he claims no perfection. I am sure he would not ask any man to put him above his fellows. But he is remarkable for his knowledge in a practical and a theoretical way of forestry, of conserving the existing forests and of planting and rearing trees for future forests. He is remarkable for another thing, that being a young man, a man of brains, a man of wealth, a man of educa-tion, to whom larger possibilities in politics or business open themselves, he has chosen to devote himself, sacrificially in some respects, to this great work of forest conservation, of perpetuating for the people yet to come, who will inhabit the valleys and the arable lands and the semiarid lands of the West, a water supply without which it is an irreclaimable have made mistakes. This policy began not many years ago. It has made great progress, not simply in the increase in acreage of the forest reserves, but in the system, in the methods adopted, and in the results. It has gone far enough under his supervision to vindicate the policy as one of great public value.

He sent me this statement at my request, and I will read a part of it. It is a statement in which I have the utmost confidence.

In the creation of reserves agricultural land is carefully excluded so far as possible, but since the nature of the country makes it impossible to avoid including occasional small isolated areas, such areas, when shown to be in fact agricultural, are opened to bona fide settlers under the act of June 11, 1906.

All the resources of the reserves—wood, water, and grass—are open to the fullest use and development, the only restriction being that they shall be so used as to be permanently usable.

That is the object and the value of the policy. It looks not simply to to-day, but to long years to come; not simply to the people who are living in the section now, but to the people who are yet to come and who will come.

The mineral laws apply in forest reserves exactly as they do outside, as provided in the act of June 4, 1897.

Timber on the forest reserves which can be cut safely and for which there is actual need is for sale.

It should not be burned, should it? Why should it not be sold and the proceeds used to carry on this work and to support the Bureau instead of a constant appropriation being made from the Treasury?

Applications to purchase are invited. Green timber is for sale except where its removal—  $\,$

Here is a thought that is worth much, and it is a part of this whole policy-

Green timber is for sale except where its removal makes a second crop doubtful, or reduces the timber supply below the point of safety for local needs, or injures the streams.

Senators who have been accustomed to looking from their homes upon mountains covered with timber think it will last forever. They are mistaken. I know they are mistaken, because I have been mistaken myself in the same way. It needs care and protection. It does not receive it except upon such a plan and system as affords it under the legislation of Congress.

All dead timber is for sale.

So far as the requirements of law for sale after advertisement to the highest bidder will permit sales are made to small men, so as to prevent monopoly by disposing of timber to large corporations. Is this denied?

Timber valued at $500.945.76 was sold during the last fiscal year. The time allowed for cutting was from one to five years and amount actually received for timber cut and removed amounted to $242,668.23. Settlers and residents are given free use of timber in establishing and maintaining their homes.

Is that true? Is that policy worth nothing? Does that deter immigration? It invites it. The man with a prairie farm, with no timber plot upon it, deems himself very unfortunate. is worth everything to the people who go there to make homes to feel that the timber within their reach shall be perpetuated and still be open to wise use as the years go on.

Settlers and residents are given free use of timber in establishing and maintaining their homes. During the last calendar year 13,575 free-use permits were issued, to the value of $68,547.41.

I have a list of the States in which these permits were

The grazing industry of the West depends on the forest reserves because the summer range, without which the winter range is useless, lies almost wholly in the mountains. Grazing animals are excluded from cut-over areas to safeguard the reproduction.

The summer range up in the mountains leaves the grass to grow during the summer down in the valley for winter use. It is so with cattle as it is with the elk. During the summer they are up on the mountain ranges. During the winter they are down in the valley regions, and they find food there which they would not find there if there were no mountain ranges.

It would be impossible to exclude all grazing from the western reserves without ruining the live-stock business of the country and raising the price of meat. Under proper regulation the grazing does little or no harm.

He says something further on that subject which I believe is true. Speaking of the old ranges in the Government reserves:

How is the range used when the lands are still unreserved?

It is open to all, without restriction or regulation. As a consequence, there is continual warfare between the big stockmen and the little stockmen, between sheep and cattle men, and the range deteriorates constantly from overgrazing.

I have known instances of that myself, and I suppose the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren] agrees that that statement is an accurate statement.

desert. He does it for the love of it, not for your little pitiful salary. There are not many men within my knowledge who have been willing to do that.

Instead of being criticised he deserves the highest commendation, Mr. President, in my judgment. Of course he may Take almost any part of the West and ask the old settlers how the grass compares with that of former years. In many localities—

That is, the old ranges.

That is, the old ranges.

It is almost totally destroyed.

If a forest reserve is made out of this public land, the range is not locked up. It does not cease to benefit the general welfare. It is grazed by cattle and sheep. It is used by the small man and the big man, but with this important difference: Its use is so regulated that the big man and the small man are both assured of the share which rightfully belongs to them through prior use and settlement, and the grazing is so regulated that the range will support the total number of stock allowed without deterioration. It is kept at its highest productive capacity. It is precisely the same with the range as with the timber. A forest reserve makes sure of a better and wiser use and a permanent prosperity. The stockman wants it.

I ask leave to incorporate this statement in my remarks. Mr.

I ask leave to incorporate this statement in my remarks, Mr. President, and I have nearly finished.

Without objection, permission is The VICE-PRESIDENT. granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The matter referred to is as follows:

The forest reserves cover mountainous land in the West more valuable for forestry than for any other purposes. or no harm.

Since the transfer of the Forest Service to the Department of Agriculture two years ago the area of the reserves has increased from 58,000,000 to 127,000,000 acres; the personnel has more than doubled; the use of the reserves by the western people has increased many fold, and yet under the estimates the total cost to the Government of forest work during the coming fiscal year will have increased only from $800,000 to $900,000.

During the last fiscal year of the administration of the reserves in work during the coming fiscal year will have increased only from $800,000 to $900,000.

During the last fiscal year of the administration of the reserves in the Land Office the total expenses of the Government forest work in the Interior and Agricultural Departments were $800,000 and the receipts were $60,000, a net charge of $407,000. During the first full fiscal year of administration by the Forest Service the expenses were $1,195,000, the receipts $767,000—a net cost to the Government of $430,000.

The policy thus inaugurated if allowed to continue would have made by the western people and the efficiency of their administration over an area more than double.

The policy thus inaugurated, if allowed to continue, would have made the Forest Service self-sustaining in five years from the transfer, or three years more, and while vastly increasing the use of the reserves by the western people and the efficiency of their administration over an area more than double.

Protection against fire is very successful, fires having almost disappeared. The last fiscal year they burned over less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the total area.

Trespass is practically at an end.

The best supporters of forest reserves are the people who live in them or immediately about their borders. The great associations of stockmen, lumbermen, miners, and others support the policy.

The following instructions from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Forester outline the policy:

"In the administration of the forest reserves it must be clearly borne in mind that all land is to be devoted to its most productive use for the permanent good of the whole people and not for the temporary benefit of individuals of companies. All the resources of forest reserves are for use, and this must be brought about in a thoroughly prompt and businessilke manner, under such restrictions only as will insure the permanence of these resources. The vital importance of forest reserves to the great industries of the Western States will be largely increased in the near future by the continued steady advance in settlement and development. The permanence of the resources of the reserves is therefore indispensable to continued prosperity, and the policy of this Department for their protection and use will invariably be guided by this fact, always bearing in mind that the conservative use of these resources in no way conflicts with their permanent value.

"You will see to it that the water, wood, and forage of the reserves are conserved and wisely used for the benefit of the home builder first of all, upon whom depends the best permanent use of lands and resources allke. The continued prosperity of the agricultural, lumbering, mining, and live-stock interests is directly dependent upon a permanent and accessible supply of water, wood, and forage, as well as upon the present and future use of these resources under businessilke regulations, enforced with promptness, effectiveness, and common sense. In the management of each reserve local questions will be decided upon local grounds. The dominant industry will be considered first, but with as little restriction to minor industries as may be possible; sudden changes in industrial conditions will be avoided by gradual adjustment after due notice, and where conflicting interests must be reconciled the question will always be decided from the standpoint of the control of the forcest service, as the Fresident has declared, is to create and maintain prosperous homes and conserve the natural resources upon which those homes depend.

Just what does it mean when unreserved public lands are proclaimed public forest reserves? Let us get down to simple facts and see what kind of a change really takes place.

We have, to start with, throughout the Rocky Mountains and Pacific sometimes sparsely timbered, frequently covered with brush, and usually producing good crops of grass and other herbage; vast areas which contain the sources of innumerable streams, the waters of which are used for irrigation, power, and transportation. These lands are worthless for extetlement. If unreserved, they will not be taken up for homes or cultivated for the support of families. Their altitude, their appointable. That they are in no sense of the word homesriss lands has been determined beyond all doubt through careful examinations on the ground by western men familiar with western conditions; by men who know from practical experience what lands can be cultivated and what lands can not be cultivated with success.

What are these vast areas good for? for one thing. The production of summer range for catlle and sheep for another thing. And last, but not least, they are the all-important conservers of the water supply for the frams and manufactures of the lowlands. They are the great reservoirs upon which the solid prosperity of the valleys depends. How are t

STOCKMEN.

It is open to all, without restriction or regulation. As a consequence, there is continual warfare between the big stockmen and the little stockmen, between sheep and cattle men, and the range deteriorates constantly from overgrazing. Take almost any part of the West and ask the old settlers how the grass compares with that of former years. In many localities the range is almost totally destroyed.

If a forest reserve is made out of this public land, the range is not locked up. It does not cease to benefit the general welfare. It is grazed by cattle and sheep. It is used by the small man and the big man. But with this important difference—its use is so regulated that the big man and the small man are both assured of the share which rightfully belongs to them through prior use and settlement; and the grazing is so regulated that the range will support the total number of stock allowed without deterioration. It is kept at its highest productive capacity. It is precisely the same with the range as with the timber. A forest reserve makes sure of a better and wiser use and a permanent prosperity. The stockman wants it.

What happens to these vast areas from the standpoint of water supply when they are still a part of the unreserved public domain?

They are left to the ravages of fire, to destructive lumbering, and destructive grazing. Their cover of forest, brush, and grass is slowly, but surely destroyed. They gradually lose their sponge-like properties as great reservoirs for holding and regulating the waterflow. The rains rush quickly down the slopes, causing floods in the wet season and droughts in the dry seasons.

In forest reserves these lands are systematically protected. The most important protection is from fire. There is an organized force on the ground whose business it is to prevent this destruction. It is not a perfect force at present, but it is all the time becoming more efficient. If anyone doubts the effectiveness of this system those on the forest reserve. The results are there to speak for themselves.

Let us look at this whole matter from the standpoint of what it really means. In many of the Western States there are very considerable areas of public lands brought together into forest reserves. Maps which show these areas colored in green seem to conjure up grave fears in the minds of the opponents of the Government's policy, and these green areas are pointed to as if they were huge tracts surrounded by stone walls dropped upon the mountains as a blanket to all future development. The cry goes up that so and so many million acres have been closed to settlement. The truth is that settlement is impossible from the nature of the case. If there were a chance of settlement, these areas would not be in forest reserves. Nobody wants to make forest reserves out of agricultural lands.

Then the cry is raised that the resources are locked up and that the present and future development of the region is crushed beyond hope. This objection is absolutely without foundation for the simple reason that all the resources on each and every forest reserve are now being used.

being used.

They are being used by those who have the best right to their use. They are being used for the greatest good of the greatest number in the long run. And their use will continue in just this way.

Forest reserve is an unfortunate term. As a matter of fact, the resources of these mountain areas are not reserved, they are conserved. In other words, they are wisely used. The name misleads.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a question which is the wisest and best, to do away with this policy, except up on the mountains where the land never can be utilized for farming purposes, or keep it for the people's use.

Mr. HEYBURN. What people?
Mr. SPOONER. The people who live out there now and the people who are to live out there after the Senator-which I hope will be a great many years—shall have passed to his last It is not for to-day, and that is where the mistake is. It is in looking upon Idaho purely from the standpoint of today. You can pay too much for the too rapid development of a new State. You can pay too much for rapid increase in population in such States. You can lay now a foundation deep and bread and strong for future wealth for all the people of Idaho and the West generally. I think this policy does it. think Congress ought not to be penurious in carrying it on. think this notion that no money shall be expended in a work of this kind without estimates is fatal to the work. It is full of vicissitudes. More men may be required to morrow by a thousand than are required to-day. It depends upon fire; it depends upon whether a whirlwind shall sweep over the timber, as to what will be required to take it out and preserve it. There are many things, Mr. President.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway], I think, was mistaken the other day in the figures upon which he based a part of his argument, and I know he is in favor of this policy of forest reserves. It was stated here, as I understood it, that in 1905 the total appropriation for forestry work was $375,000. Mr. HEMENWAY. That is right, Mr. President. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin vield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I said that the whole appropriation for forest reserves was $375,000. My statement was accurate and cor-The statement the Senator holds in his hand is a misleading statement.

Mr. SPOONER. In what respect?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It includes an appropriation for experiments of different kinds and descriptions to be carried on in the Agricultural Department apart, and that is not a part of the appropriation for forest reserves appropriation for forest reserves.

Mr. SPOONER. Was it expended for that purpose?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It was not. It was an appropriation under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture when the forest reserves were under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. If the Senator will permit me, I want to say that there is no man in the Senate who favors forest reserves to a greater extent than I do, and I resent the criticism that the Senator who seeks to have some intelligent idea of what the money is being appropriated for in trying to secure that information is forest reserves

Mr. SPOONER. I have suggested no such thing of the Sena-

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senator has not suggested it, but it has come from other Senators. I have gone carefully into the estimates for the fiscal year 1908, and I want to speak of the practical side of this question for just a minute.

We are discussing and have been discussing the benefits of forest reserves. The question pending is a question of appropriation. The Secretary of Agriculture sends in an estimate for the service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908. In those estimates he says he wants $131,460 for the Forestry Service. Then for general expenses, Forestry Service, for experiments of different kinds and descriptions, for testing of timber, and things of like character he wants an appropriation of $770,060, making altogether $901,520. He states in these estimates in a note that is added that last year-

Salaries of supervisors, forest rangers, technical assistants, forest guards, etc., paid out of the funds derived from the proceeds of sales of timber, etc., of the national forest reserves.

That is $863,000, which added to the estimates he has made for this year makes a total of $1,764,000.

Now, I want to appropriate, and I believe the Senate wants to appropriate, a sufficient sum of money to properly administer the forest reserves, but we want to know, and we have a right to know, how the money is to be expended.

The Secretary of Agriculture, since this discussion has come up, sends in a statement to which my attention has been called, saying that in Idaho it will cost one and two-hundredths cents per acre, and so on-so much per acre. That is not the estimate. They need so many rangers; they need so many superintendents; they need so many men to do this, that, and the other service connected with administering the Forest Service. They know this by reason of their experience in past years. Here is the list. It shows 346 assistant foresters, etc., last year. So they know, by reason of the number of men they have employed heretofore, about the number of men who will be required for the service next year. Why can not the Chief Forester or the Secretary of Agriculture say in plain language: "We want about so many men, and we want to pay them about so much money?" Of course, they can not estimate down to a dozen men, but they can give us an idea of what they propose to do with this money. Then, for one, I am willing to appropriate it.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say, Mr. President, that there are about a thousand rangers and supervisors, averaging about a thousand dollars per annum. That alone would require, say, a million dollars for the rangers for the supervision of the for-

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am willing that there should be an appropriation for that service.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have not the slightest doubt that everybody would be satisfied if there could be a large enough lump sum. I think we are practically agreed on that point. It is of tremendous value, after all, to the service that it shall not be impaired, where the danger is so immense, by too close appropriation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to take that as a basis and appropriate, upon the suggestion of the Senator from California, a million dollars for this service, and then add to it the $770,000 a year for experiments. But I want to know next year what they do with the $770,000. The matter is very much confused this year.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will permit me a moment to make a suggestion, I think everybody will agree with the Senator that Congress ought to know what has been done with the money; but as to the definite and accurate detailed items and estimates in advance for a service like this, it must be clear that it would be rather difficult to furnish them. For example, great forest fires occur, and the area of these reserves is immense and they require a great deal of expenditure that can not be anticipated.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the fact that it is a great service, if the Senator will permit me just a minute, is not going to keep me from inquiring as to how the money of the Government is expended. If you will take this little book——
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Nobody wants to do that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We find that hundreds of men are employed; we find here for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, We find that hundreds of men are emthere was expended for traveling expenses alone the magnifi-cent sum of $119,000, and this year the traveling expenses are running way beyond that. We find men sent out here at a salary of $1,100 a year, securing as high as $1,900 and $2,000 for traveling expenses. That means over $6 a day that some of them are receiving for traveling expenses. I do not believe that the Congress of the United States ought to put it in the power of any man to employ hundreds of men, to fix their salaries himself, audit traveling expenses himself, and determine all these questions. It is too much power for the Congress of the United States to delegate to any one man in the executive de-

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have the utmost respect for the ability of the Senator from Indiana, as I have the profoundest confidence in his wisdom and patriotism. No one excels me in that respect. If he thinks I have been criticising him in the sense that he used that word, I beg to assure him that he was mistaken.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want to assure the Senator that I do not think he has been criticising any of my statements; but other Senators have thrown out the intimation that because of an effort to know what is being done with the appropriation and with the receipts from the sale of timber and the receipts from the sale of grazing lands, in some way this forest-reserve system is being opposed.

We talk about making it self-sustaining. With the millions of dollars' worth of timber that we have growing on the forest reserves the Forester can sell a thousand dollars' worth of it or a million dollars' worth of it, or, under the existing law, he can sell $20,000,000 worth of it in one year. If the Senator wants to preserve our great forest timber, then he had better suggest an amendment to this bill limiting the amount of timber that may be disposed of in any one year by the Forest Bureau, because under existing law they can absolutely sell $50,000,000 worth of timber or a hundred million dollars' worth of timber in one year.

It would be like my having an estate of 20,000 acres of land and turning it over to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin to administer for me, and he would come back and say, "I will make it self-supporting; I am selling enough of your timber each year to pay the expense of running the estate; I am renting out your grazing lands to pay the expense of running the estate." These reserves are the property of the Government, and of course the Department can sell enough of the timber each year to pay the expenses, if they want to. But that is not making it self-sustaining; it is selling the property of the Government to pay running expenses.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think the Senator is arguing from a false premise. It is not engaging in the lumber business in a strict sense. The object is not to see how much lumber can be manufactured and sold in a year-

Mr. HEMENWAY. I sincerely hope the Senator is right in his statement.

Mr. SPOONER. The purpose is to conserve the forests that is the primary purpose—and the water supply. How much timber will be sold next year no man can tell. That depends more or less upon nature; that depends upon the condition in which the forests are left by the wind. The theory of selling timber-they do not cut it en bloc, as I understand, as the lumbermen do-

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, that is the theory that I believe in. But, if the Senator will permit me, the danger is this: Here is a proposition submitted to the House of Representatives to borrow $6,000,000 in order to construct roads and Here is a statement in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture that roads and bridges ought to be constructed. All I fear is that in the anxiety to carry out these great schemes and to progress more rapidly perhaps than is wise there may be more timber sold than ought to be sold, in order to secure a fund with which to carry out these schemes. But I do not criticise anybody for them. I would not give a snap for a man who is not energetic. A man is not worth anything in a Department unless he is an enthusiastic worker in the Depart-We have at the head of this Service a wonderfully enthusiastic and brilliant scholar, and he wants to get $6,000,000 to expend in roads. Congress ought not to give it to him; and I sincerely hope he will not sell the timber in our great forest reserves with which to do that work of construction. the objects of my amendment is to prevent just that thing occurring and to provide that our great forest reserves shall be conducted, as the Senator is now suggesting, by selling just such timber as has reached the point where it ought to be sold.

Let us go along taking care of our forest reserves in every way possible. I am willing and anxious to appropriate out of the Treasury of the United States a sufficient sum of money for that purpose. Here are the estimates; here is what they have asked for. If we give it to them, is not that enough?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think the Senator is quite right that an accurate report of all expenditures should be made so that the Congress will know—I do not know that it has not been made—how every dollar of the pub-lic money in connection with this service has been expended. No one can object to that. I seriously doubt, however, whether you can, without crippling this service, apply to it the same rules as to estimates which are applied to the departmental work and much of the Government work of a different character, because it may develop in a week from now that conserving or subserving the legitimate, necessary part of this work involves the employment of a thousand men-not to cut timber, but to save timber-and the character of the work itself is such that it seems to me impossible to hold the service down to an estimate such as you would have as to the Departments.

Another thing. I do not think there is any foundation whatever for the suspicion or the fear-I will not call it suspicionexpressed by the Senator from Indiana that the head of this Bureau will forget the science with which he is enamored and become a mere lumber merchant; that he will destroy the timber which ought not to be cut simply for the purpose of getting money, rather than to pursue the system, with an underlying principle which has governed him, to cut what ought to be cut, promoting the great object in view—the conservation of the forests. Down timber ought to be cut, otherwise it will be destroyed. It will not only be destroyed, but it invites fire, which destroys unlimited quantities of timber. The Senator can not tell how much down timber there will be a month from now in excess of the down timber to-day. That depends upon the storms; that depends upon the winds. All I am endeavoring to impress upon the Senator is that this is a service which of necessity must have flexibility.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Do I understand the Senator to say that we ourselves cut and prepare for market dead and down timber, or that we sell it to some one else?

Mr. SPOONER. We sell it. Every tree has got to be marked. Mr. HEMENWAY. I know; and all we need is the force that does the marking. I suggest to the Senator that our Chief Forester is a man of extraordinary ability, and should be able to lay out his plans for a year and follow them with a reasonable degree of certainty, and make his estimates just as other officers make their estimates.

Of course there has got to be something of a lump-sum appropriation, such as we have in this bill of half a million dollars, which, while intended for improvements, under the language of the bill, can be expended for administration, protection, or any purpose the Secretary sees fit to expend it for. It is well to have a lump sum for this service somewhere, out of which emergencies can be met, and the Committee on Agriculture put in here an appropriation of $1,000,000. The House appropriated a half million dollars, and the Senate increased it to a million, and we agreed upon half a million, which will be available for administration, for protection, etc.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, it must be borne in mind constantly-and I must yield the floor-that while there has been an increase in expenses there has been a great increase in the The forest reserves have increased in area from 57,000,000 to 128,000,000 acres.

I want the Senator to believe, if I can induce him to do it— and I have no thought about it but the public interest and a little knowledge and much faith—that there is every reason to believe that the prophecy of the Chief Forester that in two or three years this Bureau, going along, conserving the timber supply and the water supply with reasonable appropriations from the Treasury will be self-sustaining. Its past earnings demonstrate that. They must cut for the free use of the settler, and all that. I can not go into detail, and I am not antagonizing the Senator-

Mr. HEMENWAY. I understand.

Mr. SPOONER. But I have a conviction that—
Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senator will admit that this is a magnificent estate. The Government owns millions of acres of timber land, many thousands of acres of fine grazing land, and it does seem to me as though any good business man in this country would take that wonderful estate and administer it in such a way, only selecting the dead-and-down timber and only rent-

Mr. HEMENWAY. It seems to me that any good business man could take that wonderful estate and secure from it an income that would go into the Treasury of the United States and more than pay for its administration.

Mr. SPOONER. But he would need some capital.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want to say, too, that if I could own such a magnificent estate there would be only the dead-anddown timber sold, and the grazing lands rented, at a fair profit, and I would have a wonderful income over and above the cost of administration, as would the Senator from Wisconsin. There is no reason why the agent of the Government can not take that great estate and manage it, as it should be managed, so as to conserve the forests, increase the growth of timber, and yet have a wonderful income to go into the Treasury of the United States, over and above the cost of administration.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Indiana, if we could possibly spare him, would make a magnificent Chief Forester. He might do it; I could not.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I would, out of the receipts, employ Mr. Pinchot, at $5,000 a year, and all the good foresters of the country and have an ample sum to pay for their advice and their services, and the Senator from Wisconsin would, too. Think of it! One hundred and twenty-seven million acres of land, with no taxes to be paid, with the dead-and-down timber all over it to sell, fine grazing land-the man who could not take that land and get an income out of it over and above administration expenses ought not to be in the service of the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that is very easily said; but even the Senator from Indiana, able as he is, could not do what he says he could do. The Senator from Indiana can not make bricks without straw. Mr. Pinchot is not the owner of the estate. He is the agent of the Government, which is the owner. I only want to say in conclusion—
Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Pinchot's status borders very closely on ownership.

Mr. SPOONER. Now

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does th yield to the Senator from Indiana? Does the Senator from Wisconsin

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, I say the legislation, if the Senator will permit me—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has not yielded.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall soon yield the floor, Mr. President. I have a conviction that this is one of the best services under the Government; that it is well started on a proper plan; that it is being conducted in a scientific way, and that the Chief Forester ought to have the money which he deems necessary, within fair limits, to enable this plan and this system to be developed and consummated. He can not do it without the money.

The more acres a man has to take care of the more money it requires to enable him to take proper care of them. One hundred and twenty-eight million acres, Mr. President! It is an impossibility for an agent to conserve and protect them without the owner affording him implements with which to work, money with which to hire men, the means with which to meet vicissitudes. It is a work that I for one shall not vote to endanger I would make the appropriation, if I had power to do it, just what is asked. I would demand a strict account of expenditures, but I would not stop its development at the present stage of it. I would let it go on for a couple of years, taking the chances, from what has happened, that it will shortly be what the Chief Forester predicts—a service that will take care of itself, without requiring any money raised by taxes among the That is only my view about it.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, our action, when this matter was before the Senate day before yesterday, was somewhat hasty—a trifle hasty—and there was only a viva voce vote. In order to bring a definite question before the Senate, I propose, before I leave the floor, to make a motion for action and to ask a vote upon it. I do not propose myself to make any extended remarks. If there are any to be made, they can come with greater force from Senators who are better acquainted with these reserves. I will ask that the letter which I send to the desk, from the Secretary of Agriculture, be read by the Sec-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, February 21, 1907.

Hon. Redfield Proctor, United States Senate.

Hon. Redfield Proctor,

United States Senate.

My Dear Senaror: The enactment into law of the amendment agreed to would practically cripple the Government forest work. The Forest Service would be left with $1.500.000 with which to meet a closely estimated and absolutely needed expenditure of $2,500.000. This $1,500.000 is made up of $900.000 proposed to be appropriated and $600.000, the estimated balance of earnings at the end of the year. The sum of $500.000 proposed to be appropriated for working capital, ought not to be included in the appropriation for running expenses. If it should be necessary to use it for current expenses, the loss would be greatest to the poor settlers of the West, who need the roads and trails in the forest reserves which it will provide, but who can not afford to build them for themselves.

To cut almost in half the sum needed for the care and protection of the national forests would strike at every industry in the West. It would endanger the irrigation work of the Government by exposing the forests to fire. Forest fires threaten the mining industry, because it depends on cheap timber. Especially it would threaten the settler and home builder by making it difficult or impossible to see that he gets promptly and easily, and with safety to the forest, the small supplies of timber which the Government gives him without charge, but which are so necessary to him. There is no industry in the West which does not suffer when the forests are destroyed.

Under these circumstances I have had drawn up the inclosed summary of estimates for the Forest Service for the fiscal year 1908. They are based upon detailed records of the actual cost of work done, and they provide only for necessary forest work which the law imposes upon this Department. The inclosed statement shows, per acre by States, the estimated cost for the fiscal year 1908 of the management of the national forest reserves. The differences in cost per acre between individual reserves and consequently for the total reserve are in each s ington office. You will notice that the total cost of general administration is only 8 per cent of the total cost of the Forest Service. This charge is exceedingly low. We get it by putting the transaction of current business in the hands of the western field officers on the ground instead of conducting it at long range on paper from Washington. To this policy, coupled with the thorough system of inspection enforced by the Forest Service, I believe the vastly increased usefulness of the forest reserves to the western people is directly due.

Study on the ground, for which the third item provides, is needed to handle the practical questions arising in the management of the national forests. A good beginning in this work has been made, but unless it is continued we can not use the forests as we should. The more we know about these forests the better and more fully we can use them. Investigations to find new uses for woods at present valueless or little known yield great returns, as they have done in the case of western hemlock and southern gum.

Through its cooperative studies with private forest owners and users of timber, the Forest Service is getting results which are actually worth many millions of dollars annually in the prevention of forest fires, in the increased yield of timber, in its preservative treatment, and in economy in its use. Through this work and the publication of its results for the benefit of all, the Forest Service is building up an active sentiment for the wise use of the forest among our people. Approximately four-fifths of the forests of the United States are in private hands. It is from them that our timber supply in the future must mainly come.

The estimates inclosed show a cost of 12 cents per acre for admin-mainly come.

The estimates inclosed show a cost of 1\(\frac{1}{2}\) cents per acre for administering the forest reserves. Prussia spends over \(\frac{5}{1}\) per acre, Bavaria about a dollar and a quarter. France about a dollar. We are handling a property worth nearly a billion and a half of dollars for a fraction of 1 per cent of its value, and that property is increasing in value and usefulness at the rate of more than 10 per cent a year.

Very sincerely, yours,

James Wilson, Secretary.

consider is agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to insert in line 12, after the word expenses," the words "one million;" so that it will read $1,756,800."

I make this motion because the Secretary shows very clearly that this amount will be necessary to properly care for the 128,000,000 acres of forest reservations and because I believe that many Senators voted in the haste of a viva voce vote and, considering the matter more fully, think that this addition or some considerable addition should surely be made.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I suppose the entire question of forest reserves and the matter of grazing lands will be thrashed out before the grazing proposition is reached. Most of the speeches have been made upon the proposed change affecting the grazing lands of the different States, and I suppose that both propositions may as well be thrashed out now, so that when the grazing proposition is reached the necessity or the provocation for much speaking upon the subject will be avoided.

It was my purpose, Mr. President, and I suppose I will have the right to do it, even though the Senator from Vermont has offered an amendment, to send up two amendments and to have them read, which I propose to ask votes upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado proposes two amendments, the first of which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 42, at the end of line 16, after the word "dollars," insert:

Mr. HEMENWAY. May I inquire whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont has been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been.
Mr. PATTERSON. It is still pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the ble. The Chair will state that under table.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand the question before the Senate is upon the amendment which I have offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont. The Chair will state that under the strict letter of the unanimous-consent agreement individual amendments are not in order until after the consideration of the committee amendments.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have not formally offered the amend-I simply asked to have it read, stating that I intended to offer it after the amendment of the Senator from Vermont had been disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I desire to make clear the attitude of the people of the part of the West that I in part represent upon the question of forest reserves. There is no enmity to forest reserves in Colorado. The people of Colorado recognize if not their present their future advantage to the countryis, if they shall be efficiently and wisely administered. But we are opposed to the forest reserves as now declared and defined and as they are administered; and I think I am within the truth when I say that 90 per cent of those in Colorado who have been affected by the management of the reserves are dissatisfied with it and make loud and, I think, well-founded complaints.

Mr. President, a forest reserve does not mean a reserve that includes vast areas of agricultural and mineral lands upon which there are no forests nor upon which it is expected that forests will be grown. If the forest lands only were selected, allowing a fair margin for lands that are not forest to accompany them, there would not be so much complaint; but when, under the power given the President to declare and define forest reserves, they are made to include areas of land larger than States in this Union which are not forests and, so far as the knowledge of man goes, never have been forests and will not be forests, shutting them out from occupation and settlement by the growing population of this country, then they enter their solemn and serious protest.

In addition, Mr. President, when the management of these reserves thrusts itself into the every-day life of those who have to do with them, when they hunt out a man who has taken possession of an abandoned cabin while he is prospecting for val-uable minerals, and it threatens to eject him and turn the cabin over to somebody else who will pay the small tribute of five or ten dollars to the Government, when, if a man's cattle shall range on territory over which they have always ranged since white men occupied the territory, the owner is compelled to pay an additional tax upon his cattle or subject himself to heavy fines and to possible imprisonment; when wherever you go through forest reserves or in their vicinity you are beset with so-called "forest rangers," Mr. President, there is too much government, too much paternalism, too much interference with the private affairs of the people in all of that, and it is to such injustices that the protests are entered.

Mr. President, we had no forest-reserve laws in this country until a very, very few years ago. Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Kansas, Nebraska, and all the other Western States, and nearly all the Middle and Southern States, were thrown open to settlement, were occupied by agriculturalists and stockmen without let or hindrance.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator think because at a certain period of history we were without forest reserves therefore we should continue to go without forest reserves?

Mr. PATTERSON. No; I do not. But I do think that after such a State as Indiana, for example, which the Senator in part represents, and such States as Ohio, and Wisconsin, and Michigan, and Kansas, and Nebraska, and other of the great Commonwealths of the country have been populated, and settled, and developed, and civilized, when all of their broad areas have been opened to occupation and settlement by the people without such obstructions as forest reserves; when they undertake to impose a new and a radical and a revolutionary system upon States younger than theirs, they ought to be willing to make it a conservative measure and not demand one that is radical and burdensome.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Would it interrupt the Senator if I make a suggestion which will occur to him probably, as he comes from one of those States, and we are proud in Indiana that the Senator came from our State. That fact is this: There is no person in any of the States he has named—Indiana, Ohio; and he heard what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] said about his own State—who is not sorry that we did not have just such a system of scientific forest preservation where it was needed, instead of having what actually occurred, the ruthless destruction of our woods and the consequent dearth in our streams.

Take the State of Wisconsin, about the destruction of the forests in which the Senator from Wisconsin spoke with so much I spent a great many weeks in the midst of the heart of what only a few years ago was one of its forest reserves, and that forest had been destroyed by an act of the legislature under the influence, I was informed and believe, of vast lumber interests some years ago. And where those forests, which were preserving the water supply, once stood, showering untold benefits upon the people on both sides of the watershed, is rapidly becoming as denuded as though it had been a sandy plain of rock and desert.

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, Mr. President— Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does not the Senator think it would have been a good deal better if we had not had the lack of system that we had?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not object to being interrupted by the Senator from Indiana or by any other Senator for a question or a short statement in order to make his question clear; but if interruptions are to continue, I hope they will not consist of lengthy discussions, even though they contain the valuable information of which the Senator from Indiana is so full.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me a question? Mr. PATTERSON. Not now, because there is no such thing as continuity of thought under a process of that kind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; just a question.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; just a question. I wish to ask the Senator whether he remembers that during the speech of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark] the Senator from Colorado interrupted him two or three times, not to ask a question, but to make remarks several times as extended as the remarks I have just made?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; but where I have done that thing once, or where any other Senator on this floor has done it once, I think we may safely say that whenever the Senator from Indiana is in his seat he does it a dozen times.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator must permit me to answer

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Indiana says I must-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And of course the Senator will.

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield.

The Senator is always engaging, but par-Mr. BEVERIDGE. ticularly so when he essays into the realms of imagination. He will find, upon an examination of the Record, that I have used less of the time of the Senate every session since I have had the felicity to be a colleague of the Senator by at least ninetenths than the Senator himself. [Laughter.] The Senator has taken at least ten times as much time, and of course has given the Senate a hundred times as much information.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I simply wanted to suggest, in view of what has been said of the interruption of the Senator from Wyoming this morning, that they were very welcome, because the Senator from Wyoming knew the time would be better occupied than when he himself held the floor.

Mr. PATTERSON. When I made the criticism upon the Senator from Indiana, it will be noted that I guarded it care-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought it was a compliment.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have the floor, and I must be permitted to complete at least a single sentence without interruption by the Senator from Indiana.

I carefully guarded it, and said that when the Senator was in his seat in the Chamber. Of course when he is out of the Chamber

Mr. BEVERIDGE rose.

Mr. PATTERSON. There, you see. The Senator can not yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I merely want to say to the Senator that that same criticism can not be made upon the Senator from Colorado, for when he is in the Chamber he is always on his [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. If I were absolutely sure that the code duello was not in existence in Indiana, I would say concerning this last statement of the Senator from Indiana what the truth is; but if his valor be as great-I was going to say as his loquacity, and I can find no other word now to use—and the code duello were a part of the Hoosier creed, I would not for a moment put myself in the danger that the proper designation of his statement would impend.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Indiana and his action upon the floor in a debate in which he interests himself remind me of a scene I witnessed on the floor of the House of Representatives when I was a Member there, so long ago that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very ancient history.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Member from Ohio, Mr. Cox, was making a speech. The present Speaker of the House, Mr. Cannon, then a tyro like I was myself, had been interrupting Mr. Cox, and previously had been interrupting a number of other Members in the speeches they were making. Mr. CANNON found it impossible to speak on any subject without a prodigious arm movement and an aggressive pointing of the index finger that has since helped to make him famous. The Member from Ohio got a little disturbed at the frequent interruptions. When the present Speaker rose again and sought recognition Mr. Cox proposed that if the Member from Illinois would put his hand in his pocket, so that he would not shake his finger at him and the other Members of the House, he would permit him to occupy the floor as long as he did so. [Laughter.] Cannon agreed to the proposition, and he put his hand in his pocket. He commenced to speak; but he had not spoken three seconds before his hand was out and his finger was pointing at Mr. Cox. [Laughter.] Immediately Mr. Cox called him to order, and Mr. Cannon was compelled to take his seat.

I hope that this little story, which is absolutely true, will find recognition by the Senator from Indiana, so that Senators may occasionally have the benefit of a little noninterference with their arguments

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. I must— Mr. BEVERIDGE. This, I think, is the last time. I am very fond of the Senator and his reminiscences, and he will be courteous enough to permit me also to indulge in a very brief reminiscence concerning something which the Senator himself said a moment ago, to wit, that he would be glad if he could be permitted to finish a sentence.

I remember having heard of a scene, not in the other Chamber, but in this Chamber, where Mr. Evarts, of New York, gave a description of one of his own sentences which I think is applicable to those of the Senator. Mr. Evarts said of his sentences that the trouble was that "they lacked terminal facilities." [Laughter.] So it is hard to let the Senator from Colorado finish a sentence.

Mr. PATTERSON. Whatever may have been the self-admitted faults of the then Senator from New York, if I could only be graced with them, however he or others might have regarded them, I would be proud of my accomplishments and the people of Colorado would be proud of one of their Senators.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There was no criticism in that. It was merely pointing out to the Senator that it was hard—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That it was hard to let him get through Now I will not interrupt the Senator any more. sentence.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, there are some things which are almost incredible, but I believe, under the circumstances, the Senator will do his best to live up to his pledge. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I want to make plain to the Senate, if I can, the real attitude of the people of Colorado with reference to this grazing proposition and the forest reserves. As I said, we believe in forest reserves, but those who are thrusting them upon us are the representatives of States that have grown into mighty empires, that are studded from north to south and from east to west with great cities and towns and villages and farms and shops. If our mountain States were like unto them, we would not complain. But, like the Senators from States whose limit has perhaps been reached, at least whose prosperity and population have been insured, we might, if we were not too broad for such littleness, attempt to foist an unwelcome and distasteful system upon weaker States.

When I lived in Indiana I recall that the people were engaged in clearing the forests, and they were clearing the forests to make homes, to build upon the lands their houses and barns, and that they might replace the timber with fields of corn and grain and orchards. I put it to the Senators from those States, if some inspired genius had arisen in the early days of their States' history and suggested that the destruction of the forests was a crime, that populating the country was a mistake, that a third of the area of Indiana or Michigan or Ohio should remain untouched and unpopulated in order that forests might grow and wild animals roam in their wilds, and the Government put his vagaries into effect, I have no question but that there would have been trouble in those States, troubles that would have resulted in bloodshed.

Mr. President, let us have forest reserves; let the reserves be guarded, let them be patrolled, let regulations be made to prevent fires occurring and for their extinction; even take steps to preserve the game; but I protest, in common with the people of the State I in part represent, that under the so-called "forest reserve" we do not want more than a fifth of our State taken from the people and turned into a mere game preserve.

I refer to the table that accompanied the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture which was sent to the clerks' desk by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor] to show what this means to some of the States. In Idaho there are 19,000,000 acres taken from settlement and cultivation; in Montana there are 17,000,000 acres and more set apart for silence, to be deprived in Oregon, 12,500,000 acres; population: 19,000,000 acres; in Colorado there are 12,000,000 acres; and so on down the list of States, until we find that 128,825,921 acres have been, by the edict of a single man, separated from the rest of the country and practically, though not theoretically, shut up so that the settler may not enter it and its wealth may not be developed, and that it may be turned over to game and live stock.

Nearly every Senator who has experience with these reserves has borne the same testimony. It is that while the right of entering lands within the forest reserves as homesteads is given, it is practically a right without power to take advantage of it, for when the home seeker finds that those lands are occupied to their full capacity with the cattle and horses and sheep of those who pay the Government for the right of grazing and that the stock owners thus occupying the lands frown upon those who enter them to divide them into farms and to make permanent homes upon them, not alone because they interfere with the ranges and the fences that inclose their homesteads and may shut out the water front from their cattle, the settler is timid about occupying them and his fears tell him he had better not.

The ordinary homestead seeker is a man of peace. He comes from the East and the West, the North and the South, and he soon learns by an experience which can not be ignored that while under the letter of the law he may enter within the boundaries of a forest reserve and take up a homestead, he is not a welcome visitor and that he will suffer annoyances which are calculated to make life on the reserve uncomfortable.

From this fact alone it is the experience of all the States having these forest reserves that homestead settlements within the reserves have practically ceased; not because good lands are not there, not because the law is not upon the statute books, but because the homesteader in going there enters a hostile atmos-Their home is not one of pleasure and comfort. Those who should be their neighbors and friends meet them with a frown. So, preferring not to have neighbors of that kind, they seek their homesteads elsewhere.

With the letter of the law permitting it there are no home steads taken up within these forest reserves; or, if there are, there are only enough to be an exception to the general rule; there are not enough to form settlements such as we find outside of the reserves.

Therefore, Mr. President, we believe that the first thing which should be done with the forest reserves already made is to have them classified with some degree of care, although it need not be with mathematical accuracy. Let the Agricultural Department, through its proper officials, determine what are agricultural, what mineral, and what are timber lands within the reserves, and then let it segregate from the forest reserves the agricultural lands and the mineral lands; and let the timber lands and the mountain summits that are above the timber line be set apart and regarded as forest reserves; and let the money of the Government be expended in protecting and improving them.

If that should be done, Mr. President, there would be no word of complaint from the Senators representing the States in which these forest reserves have been created. find that this system arrests our States in the race they are making with their sister States for wealth and supremacy, that it sets apart large areas of their agricultural and mineral lands, excluding them from agricultural settlement and turning them over to the wild game and the tame cattle to roam in, we protest, and we will continue to protest as long as such a system exists in our country.

There has been a glamour and romance attempted to be thrown over this whole forest-reserve business. The man at the head, and who perhaps did more than anybody else to produce it, is raised to the attitude of a great benefactor to the I have listened to the eulogies passed upon Mr. Pinchot until I really commenced to feel that Senators were putting a new Richmond in the field, and that perhaps when the national Republican convention met the cry would be "Pinchot and forest reserves" instead of "Roosevelt and the curbing of the trusts,"

Mr. Pinchot is a very good man-not much better, however, than a good many others. He is a man who rides a hobby-a hobby that if ridden with judgment might accomplish some good, but I am satisfied Mr. Pinchot is riding his hobby to a fall.

WHY SHOULD STOCKMEN PAY TRIBUTE?

Mr. President, why should the owners of stock be compelled to pay tribute to this new-fangled method of dealing with the public lands? The early settlers in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Nebraska, and Kansas had free range for their cattle, their horses, and their sheep. Probably a number of those who are recognized millionaires to-day got their start in life with the free range they got in those States. But after they have used the range, after their States are settled, after their resources are developed, after there has been a free opening to all the world to enter the entire area of their States to take up and occupy every square mile within them, they start a movement, and boost it—that is, I will not say intended to cripple the mountain States, but that does in fact seriously cripple them and shuts them out of the race of prosperity upon equal terms with the other States

Mr. President, as to these forest reserves, first, they should be limited. Agricultural and mineral land should be excluded from them. If the system is worth anything, it is worth starting it upon a proper basis, so that it will not be used for eliminating other lands than timber lands from the domain that belongs to the people.

And if it is properly administered, if the area is confined, the cost of administration will be much less than it is now. costs $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 per annum to administer the forest reserves as they are, and if through the agency of Congress a fourth of their area shall be taken from them and thrown open to settlement and cultivation, the cost of the management of the forests will be cut down in proportion as they are diminished in size.

Mr. President, if these reserves are curtailed there will be no necessity to levy a tax upon stockmen to make this new department self-supporting. The sale of timber—not dead timber, old timber (dead timber has little or no market value) but commercial timber that may be cut from the reserves each year—will within a short time not only furnish all the money necessary to run the forestry department, but will place a handsome surplus in the Treasury.

I know, Mr. President, it is plausible to maintain that these are the lands of the Government and, because they are, the Government should charge for their use. But so were all the lands of the country that heretofore have been settled and occupied. When you speak of the lands of the Government you mean the lands of the people, the lands of all the people. They are lands that heretofore have been opened to the citizens of every State in the mountain region and everywhere else; they have been grazed upon from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but now suddenly they can not be used by stock growers unless they pay a stipulated tax for every head to the Government. And what power has this forestry board to levy taxes? There is not a word in the statute that authorizes such official usurpation. As I suggested in my remarks the other day, the Constitution confers upon Congress, and Congress alone, the power to levy and collect taxes; and I take it unless authority is found in some act of Congress delegating to some other body the right to levy and collect taxes the authority does not exist.

We find that stockmen are now forced to pay a stipulated annual tax upon every head of their live stock within a forest reserve without any statutory authority to require them to do so. The Secretary of Agriculture compels stockmen to pay licenses for the use of the land for grazing purposes. When there is no authority found for acts of that kind, I can safely ask the Senate, What right has been conferred or what authority can be found to justify this imposition of license fees?

As a matter of course this proposition to lease the grazing lands is a necessary part of the forest-reserve system. They are twins in everything but the day of their birth. The wonder is that they were not born at the same time. The grazing proposition has, I suppose, the same inspiration as have the forest reserves. It is the same desire for money getting, or, if not that, of intermeddling, of making the Government felt, of showing the authority and the power of the Government through some ambitious official who has led to this new movement.

I desire at this time to have some dispatches, resolutions, and letters read that bear not upon the matter of forest reserves, but upon the proposed new system of leasing the grazing lands. Here is a dispatch that was sent by the governor to my colleague [Mr. Teller], and my colleague sent it to me to have it read to the Senate. I ask that the Secretary may read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

DENVER, COLO., February 18, 1907.

Hon. Henry M. Teller, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Have sent following message to Vice-President Fairranks: "The honorable senate and house of representatives of the State of Colorado join me in most respectfully requesting the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to postpone until the next session of Congress all consideration of measures which would interfere with our citizens acquiring title to public lands under the homestead law. Postponement of action until the next session of Congress will give the people of the Western States opportunity to be heard. Large districts which would now be classed as grazing lands will become agricultural lands in the near future under the application of scientific methods of farming."

Mr. PATTERSON. Here is a dispatch from the president of the Denver Chamber of Commerce on the subject, which I ask be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DENVER, Colo., February 15, 1967.

Hon. Thomas M. Patterson, Washington, D. C.:

You are urgently requested to use your best efforts to prevent the passage of the so-called land-leasing bill at this session of Congress.

THE DENYER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, MEYER FRIEDMEN, President.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. New-LANDS] spoke of the action of a convention of cattlemen out his way; stating that they favor this new leasing system. That convention sent several representatives to Washington. Whether they were invited to come I do not know; but those who came professed to represent a national convention of all classes of cattlemen, and doubtless had much to do with stiffen-ing the backbone of the President in pushing the change now that we have reason to believe he did not think about until very lately. The writer of this dispatch is one of the first men of the State, and is as well acquainted with cattle interests and the desires of cattlemen as any man who lives in the great West. I ask that the dispatch be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. T. M. Patterson, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The men who appeared before the Senate Committee on Agriculture not authorized to represent stockmen of this State and do not represent their sentiments.

Mr. WARREN. The dispatches which the Senator from Colorado is presenting are from gentlemen of high standing who are entitled to great consideration. Of course the dispatch just read comes from an individual who claims that a certain committee did not have authority. The committee appeared here with proper credentials from known associations.

At this point, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I wish to say that the President in moving in this matter did so upon the request of live-stock men and others. of renting the grazing land did not originate with the President nor with the Forestry Department, but is the result of various prayers, letters, dispatches, etc., that have come from time to time to the President and the Departments the past three or four years.

The committee which the President appointed was appointed in obedience to a demand made upon him by the duly accredited associations of live-stock men, sheep, horse, and cattle men, at their association meetings, and they appointed committees to meet with the committee appointed by the President to consider I will not say more now, although later I will the question. pursue this thread a little further.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, everybody who has any knowledge of this leasing controversy knows that it did not originate with the President, and I do not question his motives. I have no doubt but that he is impressed with the belief that a movement of this kind is a wise one. But, Mr. President, this is a question that has been before the people of the West now for more than twenty years, and there has been an irrepressible conflict between what may be called the great cattlemen and great cattle companies of the West and those who own live stock in smaller numbers.

I have endeavored to represent the views of the people of my State upon this question intelligently and faithfully. It is a matter that has been discussed in every county and town of Colorado, and I can truthfully say that almost without an exception those who favor the leasing of the grazing lands, and have been urging it for twenty years, have done so against the most urgent protest and the strongest opposition that the mass of the stockmen of the State could make manifest, Here, Mr. President, is a dispatch from the secretary of the Colorado Cattle and Horse Growers' Association, an associa-tion that, it is understood, represents the live-stock interests of the State.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I have here a dispatch from the officers of a mass meeting held at the very center of the cattle-grazing districts of Colorado that are within the reserves, at the town of Rifle, on the line of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad. I ask that it may be read. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. T. M. Patterson, Washington, D. C.:

Mass meeting over 500 stockmen, farmers, and citizens western slope adopted strong resolutions of protest against proposed amendment agricultural bill of placing grazing public lands in control of Secretary. All forest-reserve users sign agreement refusing to pay fees for grazing. You are asked to oppose any amendment to land laws at this time. White River stockmen at Meeker also held meeting and join our request. Resolution coming by mail.

FRANK D. SQUIER, President.

M. E. Morrow, Secretary.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I have here resolutions adopted by the Cattle and Horse Protective Association of several districts in Colorado-district 9 and portions of districts on the subject of Government control of the public grazing lands. These resolutions favor the leasing system, but I also ask to have that read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection,

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas President Roosevelt has declared his intentions of having all fences removed that inclose Government land by April 1, unless such fencing can become legalized; and
Whereas in many sections of the country it is impracticable for the small settler and cattleman to run cattle successfully without inclosing a certain amount of land to preserve the grass for winter use; and
Whereas the present indiscriminate method of using the public range is detrimental to the country at large and destructive almost to annihilation of the grasses and very unsatisfactory to the occupants of the public lands:

Be it resolved, That this association is in favor of Government control of the ranges and public grazing lands under a system of individual control where practicable; where not, by the permit system, the same to be administered by the Department of Agriculture, and regulated by rules best adapted to the various localities along the lines as outlined in Bulletin No. 62— Grazing on the Public Domain."

Be it further resolved, That our honorable members in the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington be earnestly petitioned to actively support any legislation having above desired results, and that we are in favor of such legislation being enacted without further delay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.
Mr. BURKETT. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado now, inasmuch as this resolution instructs him to vote for the proposition and the other resolution instructs him to vote against it, if he noticed the tenor of it?

Mr. PATTERSON. I presented that because I have presented everything that came to me in connection with my duty as a Senator from Colorado. I want to say that that is the only letter or resolution or suggestion of any kind that has reached me that is not condemnatory of the entire proposition. I desire to have read a letter received from Mr. Ammons, which gives a very intelligent view of the question and cogent reasons why this system should not be tolerated.

The Secretary read as follows:

LITTLETON, COLO., February 11, 1907.

LITTLETON, COLO., February 11, 1907.

Hon. T. M. Patterson, Washington, B. C.:

Dear Sir: I see by the papers that the Administration is trying to force through the Government control of the public ranges as a rider on the agricultural appropriation bill. If this scheme succeeds it will put half of this State under Federal jurisdiction, the Government will go into the permanent land business, lands will be classified and reclassified as being fit only for pasturage, and new settlements will be prohibited. If not interfered with most of the public lands of this State will be speedily settled up, go into private ownership, be improved, and contribute their share toward the maintenance of our State and local Institutions. The bills before Congress are being pushed in the name of the small stockman and ranchman, but they are being pushed by the big stockmen, not only without the consent, but even without the knowledge of most of the little fellows. If this new policy succeeds it will, in my judgment, greatly hinder the further development of the State, and that, too, at a time when there is a very great demand for land by actual home seekers. The selfish wishes of a few great cattle companies ought not to stop nor hinder the further settlement of the public lands. We have not reached the limit of our development. I can not believe that Colorado will welcome two systems of government, whereby one half of the State only will be governed by its people, while the other half will be under the absolute rule of some bureau in Washington. And it is not only that Uncle Sam is to become a permanent landlord, but he claims to be on a more favored plane than are other landowners in this State. For instance, he says he does not have to fence his land against trespass of live stock as others must do, but insists on fining and sending to jail citizens of this State whose live stock wander upon his unfenced land. No matter how much rental he may collect, he pays no taxes for the maintenance of our State and local governments. There is no reason for the passage of this measure except special privileges for a favored few against the welfare of the many.

I assure you that the business men and the small stockmen and ranchmen and the home seeker are against this scheme, and those who have heard of it are alarmed because the power of the administration seems to be behind it. I sincerely hope that our western Members will be able to at least postpone this matter until the people and communities most affected can be heard. Surely the attempt to change the entire policy of the Government in this hurried and unusual way can not be claimed to be in keeping with the much-vaunted "square deal," of which we have heard so much.

Isn't it possible to get concerted action by our western delegations? Yours, very truly,

E M AMMONS.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, there is one other communication I desire read. It is a series of resolutions by the Colorado State Commercial Association.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolutions of the Colorado State Commercial Association.

Resolutions of the Colorado State Commercial Association.

Whereas measures are now being considered in the Congress of the United States and by the Departments of the Interior and of Agriculture looking to the segregation of the unclaimed public domain in the State of Colorado under systems either of range leases by the acre or by assignment of range and head tax on stock grazed; and Whereas the essential point in the establishment of any such system is the classification of the lands to be leased or apportioned as grazing lands or as agricultural lands; and

Whereas the developments of the last few years have placed in the class of agricultural lands large areas which have been considered bitherto as valuable only as grazing lands, and it is now impossible to determine with any degree of accuracy whether any of the land in the plains region of Colorado can or can not be made regularly productive as agricultural land; and

Whereas the withdrawal from unrestricted and undelayed homestead entry through classification as grazing land of any considerable area which may be shown to be agricultural land would be greatly and permanently detrimental to the progress and interests of the State of Colorado; be it

Resolved by the Colorado State Commercial Association, That any steps toward the segregation or classification of the plains region of Colorado which would prevent or delay the occupancy and settlement of any lands by bona fide settlers during the present period of experiment in so-called dry farming would be of great injury to Colorado.

Resolved, That the State authorities and our Representatives in Congress are urged to make representations to the Federal authorities looking to the delay of action until this State shall have had further opportunity to work out its destinies.

Resolved, That conies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the governor of Colorado, our Senators and Congressmen at large in Washington.

Unanimously adopted February 13, 1907.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I have here, of like import, resolutions adopted by the Grand River Stock Growers' Association, strongly opposing this proposed change in our land laws; resolutions adopted at a public meeting of citizens of Rio Blanco County, Colo., to the same effect, and an additional set of resolutions adopted by the Grand River Stock Growers' Association, all of which I ask to have printed in the Record without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

[The documents mentioned are printed at the end of Mr.

Patterson's speech as an appendix.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I have in my hand, Mr. President, a private letter to me touching upon other subjects in addition to that of the land laws. I have erased the portions that do not refer to this subject in hand, and also the name of the writer, as it is a private letter. I ask also to have it printed as a part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the permission requested by the Senator from Colorado is granted.

[The letter referred to is printed in the Appendix.]

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I desire now to call the Senate's attention to a revolution in agriculture that is going on in the so-called "arid States." Until within five or six years ago it was believed that little or no land west of the one hundredth meridian of longitude could be made to grow crops without irrigation. But a man with greater knowledge of agricultural possibilities of the arid region than is possessed by most commenced experimenting a few years ago with these arid lands, with the result that he has made it clear that millions of acres of lands in the dry region, hitherto considered arid, may be farmed at great profit without the artificial use of water at all. In section after section of the plains where the water fall does not amount to more than 9, 10, or 11 inches per amum they are raising by intense cultivation crops of wheat and beets and of domestic vegetables and oats that almost rival the crops that are raised on irrigated lands. The process is known as the Campbell system of dry farming. In brief, the method is that of plowing deeply in the fall, harrowing the land plowed until it is practically pulverized, so that none of the winter's rain or snows as they melt will run off, but will all be received into the bosom of the earth and there retained to nourish the growing crops. Then comes the plowing and reharrowing immediately before the crops are planted, and, where the nature of the crops will permit, to continue harrowing to keep the clods broken and pulverized until the crops have been gathered. Under this process it has been demonstrated that lands in the arid regions will produce the character of crops that I have mentioned. With what result, Mr. President?

There was in Denver a little over a month ago a great convention of what is known as "dry farmers." The men who have taken up lands out on the plains and cultivate them for crops without irrigation met in convention to relate experiences, give and receive suggestions, and to bear testimony not only to the great possibilities of agriculture without water in the arid region, but to the certainty of great and profitable crops.

Mr. President, I was present at a great fair in the State of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren] two or three years ago, and I saw there some wonderful exhibits of grain, vegetables, and other ranch products that were raised by this new system of cultivation.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the yield to the Senator from Nebraska? Does the Senator from Colorado

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. Does not the Senator admit, however, that all this dry-land farming has developed in the last three or four years, since they have been having more rain out there than they had in the years previous?

Mr. PATTERSON. By what authority does the Senator from Nebraska claim that we have been having much more rain out there than we had previously?

Mr. BURKETT. I have been living out there; that is my I simply know we have had a flood pretty nearly all over Nebraska and in as much of Colorado as I know anything about every year for about four years, and where we have been irrigating the crops have been drowned in some places. dry-land farming has developed within these four years almost entirely, and I think it was discovered down in my State.

Mr. PATTERSON. No. Mr. President, it was developed much longer than three or four years ago; but it has been brought to general public knowledge within the past five or six years. Journals are published now at different points in the West to advance the interests of this dry-land farming system; schools have been organized that are sending out instructors to the several parts of the arid region to teach the kind of cultivation that is necessary without irrigation to grow bountiful

Mr. BURKETT. Does not the Senator-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the Senator not think, however, that the bringing in of macaroni wheat and alfalfa, and, perhaps, one or two other crops that can be raised in dry weather sections has pushed agriculture a great deal farther west than any development of the dry-land farming?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator, I am inclined to think, is getting beyond his depth. I do not know of the raising of alfalfa without irrigation, nor of the character of wheat that he describes as macaroni wheat. I have heard nothing of the wheat he mentions being raised, except by the usual methods of the country, and I have no knowledge of the growth of alfalfa except through irrigation.

But, Mr. President, I know that I am safe in claiming that there are several thousand acres of land under cultivation in my State, in the arid part of it, that are producing splendid crops of wheat, potatoes, melons, some corn, oats, and many kinds of vegetables without irrigation and with no more than the average rainfall of that section. It is the result of what we call "intense cultivation"—the conservation of every drop of water that falls, its absorption into the cultivated soil, its retention there during the winter until its fructifying influences are needed to push forward the crops.

Apropos of that, there is a plow used, I am told, which, while it turns up the soil, rolls or presses the land at the bottom of the furrow. The business at the land offices in Colorado within the past four or five years has increased four and five fold. Land seekers and home seekers are pouring into the State as they have not come into it for a good many years. The fame of the system and its possibilities have spread abroad, and sturdy farmers are flocking to the State to make homes upon this new body of land which has been opened up to agriculture

Mr. President, it is not a case of delusion growing out of a few exceptionally wet years, for we have had these crops in dry years and in wet years, and we of Colorado are looking forward to a vast increase of our farming population under this new dry-We know as we know that we are in existence farming method. that if these lands are taken up and leased to the great stock raisers under ten-year leases, or for any other considerable length of time, the advance of the State in agriculture will be nearly ended, except as the area of cultivated lands may be increased through irrigation, and the possibilities in that direction are limited. Therefore our people protest as a body against this proposed leasing of the public lands. We want them kept open We want this new system developed. for years to come want its possibilities understood. We want it improved. In-stead of the lands of our plains being roamed over only by live stock and occupied by the jack rabbit, the coyote, and the lizard, we want them populated by tens of thousands of men and women-good, patriotic, and prosperous American citizens.

I have suggested that there is an irrepressible conflict between the cattle growers themselves upon this subject in my State. Wherever you find a person who counts his cattle by the thousands and tens of thousands, there you find a man who wants a large area of the public domain fenced and over which he will be the absolute lord. He desires to have his fences continued, and if he has no fences up, he wants to put them up. He wants water fronts. It is almost incredible, when you consider the very few streams and the little water that is carried in them, how it will be possible to subdivide the public lands and fence them so as to give access to any considerable number of cattle to water. And there will be excluded from the range every head of stock which can not readily reach water. It is not every acre that can be grazed. If lands are shut off from water, if they are so far removed that the cattle or horses or sheep can not comfortably reach water, then the lands removed from water are utterly worthless.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the Senator from Colorado pretend to say that there is any water front in his State which is not privately owned right now?

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Nebraska asks me to answer yes or no a question which it would be utterly impossible for either the Senator or for me to have accurate knowl-

Mr. BURKETT. No; I would not want to put the Senator in the attitude of answering a question that he did not know about, and I would not want to ask a question I did not think I knew something about, as it affected my State. I have been investigating this matter, so far as my own State is concerned. and I thought probably the Senator had with reference to his State. The fact is, that every single foot of land in our State that is on the water front has been taken up, and if there is one thing that makes this bill of more benefit than another it is this. As the Senator said, back, away from the water front is the land that belongs to the United States. It is absolutely useless without some way of getting to the water. If you do not put some kind of control over that public land, the great cattlemen who own the water front are the only men who can use the public domain. If you put a man in control of the Government domain, he can go to the men owning the water "You can not use a portion of the main without you give us permission to send the other people down to the water front," and that is one of the good objects to be accomplished by this bill.

If the Senator's State is not that way, it is certainly a surprise, because there have been enough people go into his State to take up all the water front, and the Senator knows that the very first acre that is taken up is always the water front. always has been. That was true when they settled Iowa and Illinois and eastern Nebraska, or any other State. They always get along the water front, along the streams. That is the very first acre taken up, and every such acre is taken in Nebraska right now and is in private hands.

Mr. PATTERSON. What may be effected under the squeezing process suggested by the Senator from Nebraska I do not know. It is not suggested in the bill that the authority to be given to the Secretary of Agriculture under its terms is to be used an an instrument of compulsion to coerce the landowner whose holdings are on the water front to open them up so that cattle grazing on lands beyond them may have access to the water. That is a new development, and I thank the Senator from Nebraska for making known the purpose. The officers of the Government are expected to go to those who hold title to land along the water fronts and say to them: "Unless you allow the Government to use your land for the benefit of some one else we will arbitrarily deprive you of the use of any lands except those you happen to own." That may be a splendid way for private individuals to deal, but I take it it does not comport with the dignity nor the duties of a great nation.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BURKETT. I do not want to bother the Senator if he does not care to yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. Go ahead.

Mr. BURKETT. I want the Senator to feel perfectly free about it.

The plan under this amendment, as it is very largely carried out in the leasing of land in forest reserves, is not so much per acre as per head, although it is a question which is the better There is not going to be any force method in each instance. or any undue or improper method used, as the Senator, in going to extremes, intimates. But if there is a great tract of laud in private hands upon the water front and they turn on this great tract of land so many head of cattle, the Government simply takes a strip of country 40 or 50 miles square and, after investigation, says it will feed and take care of so many head of cattle. It lets Mr. Man, who owns the land privately, turn on so many head. It also allows on the same domain so many head belonging to some one else, and they all share in that water front. It is a sort of give-and-take process, but it enables the Government to permit others who have not a water front to pass through that same land and to have the same access to the water front. In short, it is a method of working out one of the most difficult problems for getting water for all the land there is in the West,

Mr. PATTERSON. There is a scheme, then, in the mind of the Department which is not hinted at in this bill. I have no doubt the Senator from Nebraska speaks by authority, but here is a bill which provides for leasing to individuals or to companies areas of land, as it may be agreed upon, for ten years or less. No suggestion is made of any doubling up by owners in the use of the leased lands. There is no suggestion that if a man owns within an inclosure forty or fifty thousand acres along the water front the Government officer is to go to him and say—I care not how mild his tone—"You must allow cattle within your inclosure, or to reach water through your inclosure, and if you do not, you will be treated as an enemy by the Agricultural Department and will receive no favors from the Government.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the Senator think it wrong, if a man owns forty or fifty thousand acres and controls the entire water front, for the Government to deal with him in order to secure from him for the benefit of the cattle that pasture on the hills behind and away from the water front the right to come down to the water? Is there anything wrong about it?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think when a function of that kind is undertaken by the Government it is not only wrong, but an outrage. Whenever by law you give to a Government officer the right to go to a landowner and say to him, in whatever tone he may use, "Unless you will agree to the terms of the Government in the use of your land you will not be in favor with the Government and you will be deprived of privileges that will be granted to others," it is an act of tyranny, liable to be abused at any moment, and it is an authority that does not comport with the duties of the servants of a free people. I care not how you sugar coat a proposition of that kind, it is in direct conflict with every theory and practice of a free government and has no association and should have no association with a government of the people and for the people.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator may not agree with it, but nevertheless it has been very painfully proven to a whole lot of people that the Government just now is doing that exact thing with a great number of people who have tried to corral about half or two-thirds of the universe. I do not care whether it is the men who are trying to gobble up the coal lands of the country, or whether it is a lot of other financial interests that have gobbled up the financial and commercial affairs of the country, or whether it is the great cattle kings who have gone west and through one method and another gobbled up all of the water fronts of the western country, the Administration at present is trying to do in all these particulars what the Senator says it ought not to do, and that is to break up every trust and every combination and every sort of oppression by these gigantic concerns and organizations from one end of the country to the

I said this, and I do not want the Senator to misinterpret my statement. I do not speak "with authority" or "by the card." I have not talked with any of the gentlemen of the Bureau since we have had the matter up. I do not know what the plan is. I simply said that this bill will provide a means, when somebody is put in control of the grazing lands, to break up these great cattle combinations that to-day have absolute control of all that grazing country by having control of the water fronts of the grazing country. That is why I think that this Congress and this Government ought to put somebody somewhere, either in this Department or in some other Department, in control of this land out there to look after it, so that all mankind, the little man and the big man and all kinds of men out there, may have the same opportunity and chance at the grazing privileges of the country

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Nebraska is quite un-intentionally libeling the Government.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not want to do that.
Mr. PATTERSON. And quite unintentionally libeling those who are attempting to carry out the aims of the Administration.
What the Administration is doing with the great trusts is to bring the law of the country to bear upon them. doing it is doing through district attorneys and through juries and through courts. What it is doing it is attempting to do through Congress in a perfectly lawful manner, and not with a strong arm, not with force or threats or lawless power, but through legal avenues and those alone; and when the Senator from Nebraska undertakes to place the acts of the Administration upon the low level of that which consists of giving authority to a minor or other public official to coerce the man with his fee-simple title to his farm as complete as the Senator may have to the house in which he lives, to use his land as the official will demand, or, if he does not, punish him with the disfavor of the Government, you are bemeaning the Government beyond measure.

Of course what is done in the kitchen of the Administration I can have no knowledge of. What plans may be arrived at in private consultations between members of Congress and members of the Cabinet I can have no knowledge of; but I do insist that if it is the purpose under this bill to permit officials to go over the country and use threats upon those who hold land to coerce them to permit the use of their land in such manner as the governing power may demand, it is a gross abuse of the powers and authority of government and should be frowned upon, no matter what good results may be expected to flow from it.

But, Mr. President, it is a fact, to which every owner of cattle will bear witness, that live stock will only go a certain distance When they are back from water so far that they for water. can not with comfort and without distress travel to and from the watering place each day, then the cattle business upon that part of the public domain is a money-losing proposition, and it is soon abandoned; and any system that contemplates the fencing of the public domain, I care not whether under private or public ownership, any system which changes the present methods of caring for cattle on the public lands must work incalculable injury to the industry, because in a very short time you will have the land along streams fenced in so far back that cattle behind the fenced areas can not travel the distance to water and return to the grazing ground each day, and cattle must do that if the business is to be conducted at all. on the public grazing lands the cattle may roam untrammeled by fences, they find the water holes and the little running streams which it would be impossible for them to use if this proposed system shall be put in force.

So for the benefit of stockmen—I do not mean the great stockmen alone, I do not mean the citizens of Nebraska, the Senator's constituents, who with strong hand have fenced in millions of acres of Government lands and have been in constant conflict with the General Government over them-but I mean for the benefit of ranchmen, small stock growers and great ones I urge the abandonment of this entire leasing scheme and to let the good old system continue. It has its defects and there are troubles at times connected with it, but after all it is the best way that has yet been devised. Mr. BURKETT. I suggest to the Senator that most of those people with whom the Government has had trouble have been residents of the Senator's State or of one or another State adjoining.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not blame the Senator from Nebraska for making an effort to get rid of the disgrace of citizenship such as that, but I do protest against his foisting them upon Colorado. We have had enough trouble with lawbreakers and lawlessness, and we do not want to have shouldered upon us the lawbreakers, especially the lawbreaking cattle barons of the State the Senator represents.

Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I should have and in a very unsatisfactory manner to myself, but I hope I have not spent the time in vain. I do not believe there is the possibility of a favorable vote upon what is proposed. This discussion has, I think, opened the eyes of the Senate as to the injustice it will work, and knowledge of the evils it will inflict is certain to result in its defeat.

APPENDIX.

Whereas an amendment has been prepared to the agricultural appropriation bill now pending in Congress providing for leasing of the public lands for grazing purposes, or to put in effect upon said public lands the same permit system now in effect upon the forest reserves; and Whereas at the present time settlers are pouring into this State and by the application of scientific methods are redeeming and cultivating lands that a few years ago were considered valueless; and Whereas while this evolution is going on any change in the laws affecting the administration of these public lands is likely to prove disastrous and a hindrance to development; and Whereas we believe that it is to the best interests of this State to have the said public lands pass into the hands of settlers at the earliest possible time, and any change in the land laws that would hinder the taking up of said lands by private owners would be a serious menace to the prosperity of the State: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Grand River Stock Growers' Association, stockmen, farmers, and citizens of the western slope in mass meeting assembled at Rifle, Colo., this 11th day of February, A. D. 1907, That we earnestly protest against any amendment to the laws at this time, and we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to oppose the passage of the said amendment to the agricultural bill; and in doing so we assert that we represent the sentiment of a great majority of the stockmen, farmers, and citizens of the western slope of Colorado.

Resolved, That while the present evolution in the development of our State is in progress we are opposed to any change in the land laws until the proposed changes have been carefully considered by the people of the State and have been approved by at least a majority of the citizens.

Whereas there are now pending in Congress certain proposed changes in the land laws of the United States which we deem unwise and unjust; and

That we believe firmly and unalterably that each and every one of the proposed changes in the present land system, while ostensbly framed to be in the interests of the poor man, would inevitably result in giving the use and control of all unoccupied lands whether mineral, agricultural, or grazing, into the hands of corporations and the wealthy, to the absolute exclusion of the poor man; and he it

Further resolved. That we earnestly protest against the attempt to attach the proposed laws in reference to leasing as a rider to any appropriation bill, for the reason that the proposed revision of the land laws is of too important a nature and requires so much careful thought and consideration that no hasty or immature changes should be tolerated; and it is self-evident that no proper debate or consideration of the proposed changes can or will be had if the law be enacted in the method contemplated.

In conclusion, and as illustrative of the effect of recent orders upon western communities, we give the following statement as to actual conditions in our own county at the present time:

Rio Blanco County contains 107 townships.

Withdrawn on account of coal, 53 townships.
Withdrawn under reclamation act (exclusive of above coal land, part of the coal land having been included in this withdrawal), about

There remains, therefore, about 26 townships, mostly farming and oil lands, open to settlement and mining claims, from which it can readily be seen how the Administration has closed the door to progress in Rio Blanco County; be it

Whereas, after a year's experience with the permit system on the forest reserves of the western slope of Colorado, the cattle owners and farmers who have been paying fees for grazing their stock upon said reserves have been unable to find that they have received any benefit in return for the money they have paid the Government; and Whereas said reserves are unfenced and cattle drift upon the reserves whether they have paid fees or not; and Whereas the payment of fees for grazing upon the reserves is in effect an additional tax upon our industry without any adequate return therefor, and we deny the right of the Government to exact a fee under the present law: Therefore, be it

Hon. T. M. Patterson,

United States Senate, Washington.

My Dear Sur: I see by the papers that the President is making a determined effort to have some legislation pass this session to modify the public-land laws. At the convention of the State Cattle Growers' Association last menth an effort was made to have this movement indorsed by the stockmen, but the whole matter was finally laid on the table, with no action being taken. Since the convention there is a steadily increasing sentiment against having anything done at this time. The great fear of our people is that something will be done to suspend the operation of the homestead act. With the development now going on in Colorado, any plan looking toward the cultivation of the public lands as "agricultural" or "grazing" would have the effect, we believe, of putting an absolute period to the development now under way. Five years ago it was the general opinion that practically all lands in this State that could legitimately be taken up for homestead purposes had been disposed of, but with the application of scientific methods to these semiarid lands such a change has taken place that it is impossible at this time for anyone to say that any of these lands are not capable of being cultivated. There is also a very strong feeling against permitting the Government to step in and actually administrate the public lands of the State so as to produce a revenue therefrom, as it is believed that this would result in one-half of the State being under the State Government and paying all the taxes, with the other one-half under the administration of the National Government and paying no taxes. Such a condition would have a very serious effect upon development. The administration of the various reserves in the State has been an object lesson that has not encouraged our people to favor any further extension of Government control. I find a very strong sentiment in favor of having the public lands conceded to the State has been an object lesson that has not encouraged our people issued has resulted in tying up our land offices in a hard knot. There would be no objection to this if there were sufficient agents to attend to this business, but as it is it simply means more delay and red tape.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I am very desirous of seeing the finish of the appropriation bill that has been before I notice a disposition to jump forward from us for some days. the place in the bill which is properly under consideration and to take up matters and subjects not yet reached and to proceed to the discussion of them.

Regarding the grazing-control proposition I have been informed that there will be a point of order made against that amendment. In fact, I have been quite numerously advised of it and that several Senators will make the suggestion. I had therefore made up my mind to say nothing about the matter, hoping that thereby we might in the last hours of the session pass from the consideration of this bill to other pressing business.

I merely wish to say a few words now to cover some of the mistaken ground or erroneous ideas that have been expressed, and I shall occupy only a few moments. I will admit that the amendment is open to the raising of a point of order, and I would not be fair if I did not admit that there can scarcely be any doubt as to how the President of the Senate will rule upon such point of order. The committee knew that when they placed this amendment in the bill. They placed it there so that it might be considered and, if there was unanimity of opinion, that it might be indorsed, and if not it could pass out and come up again later for consideration in a future Congress.

We hardly need to apologize after having swallowed a year ago here in the Senate, in the agricultural bill, a matter of many pages of legislation embodying inspection of meat products that was not objected to by a single person, for at least bringing this grazing amendment before the Senate. And having brought it out, if a point of order is made against it I have no disposition to contest the point of order or to continue this debate. I recall that some years ago I came into this body imbued with the idea that the nation ought to do something about irrigation. Having been made chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, I prepared a bill, made a speech, and was at the next election promptly retired from the Senate on that bill and that speech. I have never felt called upon to apologize to myself or to my near friends for so early espousing the cause of national aid for irrigation, because years afterwards the subject was taken up under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt, and we were able to work out elaborate successful legislation. There was just as much difference of opinion and opposition then to national irrigation as there is here to-day or was yesterday to the forestry and grazing propositions, but those interested in it had the good sense finally to go into a volunteer committee, composed of representatives from all the arid-land States, and to thrash it out among themselves to a harmonious ending, spending more than a month in the process, and then coming before this body and the other body with a particular and definite policy. This policy was promptly indorsed, and it is being proceeded under now to the great benefit of this country.

The question as to grazing control on the public domain is, in my opinion, just as sure to come before this body and require some kind of a settlement as was that of irrigation. It will not down. The purely grazing land must be sold or apportioned, by rental or otherwise, or the range will be destroyed and wars of occupation will ensue. It is misunderstood at the present time as to what is proposed to be done, and this is evidenced not only by what we see in the press and current in the newspapers, but by the letters that are brought in here by Senators and, indeed, by the remarks of Senators themselves.

The letters which have been written by the President and read before the Agricultural Committee, and which have in a way shaped the language of the amendment, are in favor of the settler against the stockman all the way through. In fact, there is not a single lease that could be made under this law, should it pass, but what would be subject to all kinds of settlement by any settler under any of the several existing land laws. Again, even though the man who makes a home there is within an inclosure, and even if a lessee is paying by the acre or by the head for the use of his inclosure, the settler gets free grazing instantly and continuously for all the stock that he has and needs for domestic use. Furthermore, he has an opportunity to enlarge his possessions and graze more stock by leasing that which naturally belongs to him, by annexing the land nearest to his settlement and renting it as against the first tenant.

Now, this proposition is not one that is attempted to be forced in here by the Forester or by the President of the United States, although, in truth, it might seem just at this time as if we were moving a little bit fast in proposing such legislation in an appropriation bill. But there are some reasons why the President and those interested in the management of the Interior Department ought to ask Congress to settle the question.

For instance, there is a large part of the State I in part represent-and there are other States similarly situated-Congress provided railroad land grant subsidy to the Union Pacific, Central Pacific, and other railroads, alternate sections of land in a strip 40 miles wide, 20 miles on each side of the The railroads did not ask to have it in checkerboard form. The Congress granted it and forced them to accept it in that way. It has been largely sold to settlers and grazers. Much of it will never be available for anything but grazing. It was sold many years ago. There are innumerable inclosures on that land in which half of the land belongs to the men who bought of the railroad and the other half belongs to the These men fenced the land when there was no law against fencing. They are prepared, and always have been, to exchange; they are prepared to rent; they are prepared to do anything that will put an end to the confusion and the depressing and distressing circumstances existing. It is an anomalous condition.

When Congress passed the antifencing law, it took no notice of this peculiar situation, and the executive department has since been struggling with it. There have been lawsuits; there have been wrongs; there have been bankruptcies and no end of grief and trouble. Nevertheless, the law remaining unrepealed, it has come to a pass where the Interior Department and the President believe that the law must now be even more rigidly enforced, and without further delay, unless relief be afforded by Congress.

A proclamation or order has been issued which provides that after April 1, 1907, there will be no further notices to the owners of these fences, and that fences must come down instanter or the owners will be held liable both civilly and criminally on and after that date. It therefore occurred to those administering the affairs of the Government that if the Congress were ready to pass upon the question of grazing-land control, it would relieve those settlers in these checkerboard belts-mostly small stockmen with thoroughbred or high-bred stock, who are carrying on their business in inclosures, feeding over a part of the land in winter and the other part in summer. In this way the grasses are allowed to grow to maturity and scatter their seed, and reseed and reenforce the range in alternating years. If it were not the desire to afford them some early relief, this question might as well go over to another year as to receive consideration now.

Mr. President, this question, like every question, has at least two sides and sometimes many more. It is a question broad enough to discuss not for hours, but for days. I would not like to undertake to discuss this question and bring out all there is to say in and about it in the time that we have left of this week or at our disposal before the closing hour of the present Congress. Therefore I dislike to go into it at all, except to say that the President and the Forester have been brought to the condition of mind in which they now are, in my own judgment, the demands made upon them by different parties, settlers upon public lands, individual, corporate, and otherwise, from time to time in the last five years. The President has said to the committee over his signature that if they shall give him the authority he will, first, protect any and all settlers as against the grazers, whoever and wherever they may be.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me ask the Senator from Wyoming if the men who have been importuning the President to favor a law of this character are not chiefly those who have fenced unlawfully great areas of the public domain and doing so in violation of the law, and if they have not been moved to the tremendous recent effort they have been making by notice from the President that their fences will have to be removed within a certain time? Is not that the impelling power that has brought this question so prominently before Congress

Mr. WARREN. I am glad the Senator has asked me that question. I desire to say to him that he never was farther away in his life from the true state of affairs than he is if he supposes that the fact is as indicated by his question and that it is the great fences of illegal holders for which protection is sought.

Mr. PATTERSON. I know that Murdo McKenzie and others of the great stock growers were here.

Mr. WARREN. Murdo McKenzie was not here before the Committee on Agriculture, I beg to say,

Mr. PATTERSON. Murdo McKenzie called upon me person-

Mr. WARREN. He was not present surely at any of the meetings.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; but he had just left the powers that be

Mr. WARREN.

Mr. PATTERSON. He came to see me to induce me to give my influence toward putting through this particular scheme, and he assured me at the time that not only were the great stock owners behind it, but that the small ones were. I tried to find out what the facts were so far as that was concerned, and all the information that I got was that a general and almost intense feeling has been created among the average stock growers of the States in contemplation of that which they are attempting to impose.

Mr. WARREN. But the Senator now speaks of great stockmen and small stockmen, while a moment ago the question was whether the proposition was not confined to those men who had great areas illegally fenced in.

Mr. PATTERSON. It was Murdo McKenzie who represented that to me; but I found he was mistaken, greatly mistaken, and that he himself misrepresented the fact to me.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WARREN. I do. Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Colorado alluded to the powers that be" about this legislation. Who are they?

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, I am not required to furnish a bill of particulars.

Mr. WARREN. Now, Mr. President, I think it is due to Senators that I should say that there has been a disposition all through this land the past few years to assume that if a man had more than a milch cow and a horse he was a thief and a rascal and generally a lawbreaker. There have been bruited about throughout the press-and some of this yellow-journal news has originated in and been given out from one of the great Departments of this Government-charges against men in this body that they were lawbreakers because of fencing, etc.

Now, Mr. President, I think it is due to Senators that I should say that there has been a disposition all through this land the past few years to assume that if a man had more than a milch cow and a horse he was a thief and a rascal and generally a There have been bruited about throughout the lawbreaker. -and some of this yellow-journal news has originated in and been given out from one of the great Departments of this Government-charges against men in this body that they were lawbreakers because of fencing, etc.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, let me say that my own private interests are such that this legislation is exactly contrary to those interests, and to do nothing would best facilitate the interests that I have in the live-stock business. But I plead for the greatest good to the greatest number. We need more settlers and better protection for all. Let me say further that, as for myself, I have not directly or indirectly one foot of Government land illegally inclosed, nor have I one foot of illegal fence.

Now, as to the charges against men who have large inclosures, there is no one who has any sympathy for men who have large illegal inclosures out on the open public domain erected lately and since there was law against it; but when the Senate and House of Representatives have deliberately invited forces and placed a railroad grant 40 miles wide and 500 miles in length in a checkerboard form across a State, and then say to the men who have bought the odd or railroad sections in the country where there is nothing of value but grazing, "You shall pay the taxes upon the alternate sections—those black checks in that checkerboard—and still you shall keep it open for everybody to use and share equally with you, the owner," somebody is wronged. The Government has the other alternate sections—the white checks—and pays no tax. The man who owns nothing, who comes in like the grasshopper pest with his great flocks of sheep and cattle, thus has the benefit of what has cost the buyers of railroad land vast sums of money, and upon which they are daily paying taxes, while the interloper neither misses a meal nor pays a penny.

This is where the unfortunate situation comes in as to fencing; and you might as well cut out of this whole proposition the fact that there may be a few great illegally fenced areas in the United States. There is not one of them that I or anybody else but the owners themselves wish to protect. But when you come down to the man who has bought two, four, or more sections of railroad land which he can not fence without fencing in two, three or more alternating sections of Government land, and you say that he shall open up the whole mass of broad prairie, his purchased land with the balance; that he can not keep his own stock upon his own land, but must contribute his all to the roving, pirate bands of vicious owners, who pay taxes nowhere and rob ranges everywhere; that an owner can not get any benefit from his own land that others do not get, and still he shall pay the taxes year after year, do you not place upon him a hardship?

Again, in this checkerboard belt, it matters not how a man undertakes to fence in his own land, if he has 4 miles square, 2 of the Government's and 2 of the railroads, and he fences them, a settler has only to go through one fence to settle upon that inclosed Government land; but you let a man who has, say, 10 miles square of such land, and he fences the railroad land, each black or alternate section by itself, and you have not only fenced every Government section, but you have put the Government sections where an incoming settler has to go through four or five fences to get into the center sections, and you have benefited nobody, but have brought illimitable harm to the man who is a true settler and who has his money invested and who ought to be protected.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARREN. In just a moment. Again, in this checkerboard belt, it matters not how a man undertakes to fence in his own land, if he has 4 miles square, 2 of the Government's and 2 of the railroads, and he fences them, a settler has only to go through one fence to settle upon that inclosed Government land; but you let a man who has, say, 10 miles square of such land, and he fences the railroad land, each black or alternate section by itself, and you have not only fenced every Government section, but you have put the Government sections where an incoming settler has to go through four or five fences to get into the center sections, and you have benefited nobody, have brought illimitable harm to the man who is a true settler and who has his money invested and who ought to be protected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly. Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to I wish to ask a question for information because I am entirely ignorant on the subject. I just want to get at the status in the regions in the West where these landgrant roads were run and where there are the odd sections in checkerboard fashion the Senator has just spoken about. Of course as I get it now-I do not know, and I want the Senator to correct me if I am wrong-they are in about this condition: The railroads owning alternate sections, we will say, and having sold twenty or fifty of them consecutively to one man, the Government sections being between these, lying scattered and mixed up with it, are of course open to entry, if anybody wants to go in and enter that land; but owing to the fact that water is scarce and that it has probably all been preempted by somebody, are they not in a condition out there where a man who has bought the railroad land has practically confiscated the Government land, and there is no chance under the sun of anybody to utilize or to buy or to enter upon and get the Government land at all?

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina a question? What would be the condition if there were no fences?

Mr. TILLMAN. That is not the point. I want the Senator to answer my question, and then I will answer any question he chooses to ask me.

Mr. WARREN. Let me answer the question. The man who has bought the railroad land and fenced it is flat on his back, figuratively speaking.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not mean the Government land, but the railroad land.

The man who has bought the railroad land Mr. WARREN stands respectfully aside while any man on earth can come along with any kind or amount of live stock and open the fences and turn his stock inside on the railroad and Government lands, and he can say to the owner, "Order me off, if you dare; you have some Government land fenced in, and I will report you." Thus the outsider has the best protection in the world, be he either honest settler or scalawag

The real facts are that settlers who want to make claims inside such fences come in and make claims, and each one of such settlers gets the benefit of his own land and his land-owning neighbor's land and his neighbor's fences and his neighbor's water, as well. If you go out there in that country now you will find more settlers who do not own anything but their homesteads, who are trying to have something of this kind done, to provide for grazing privileges, than of any other class. Then they can go on as they are now doing with their neighbors, who own the railroad land, and continue to enjoy the privileges, the fences, and the water of their neighbors.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mind you, I am not advocating this proposed legislation, and I am inclined to think that when we get through it will not go in. I hope we will get at some adjustment relative to the rights of the people that will be fair and honest to all concerned. I should like to get the Senator to illuminate and illustrate the situation as to the Government land. If the owner of the railroad land, the alternate sections, is fencing in the Government land along with his and is enjoying it all, there is no chance for anybody else, of course.

Mr. WARREN. What does the Senator mean by saying that there is no chance? Everybody who comes along has just as much right in there under the present condition as the man who owns the land.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand the Senator is advocating that the system proposed in this bill shall become a law?

Mr. WARREN. I am stating what was the reason of its being put in here at this time; and if the Senator asks me whether I am advocating it, I want to say to him with all the emphasis I have that I am advocating it.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator then wants the man who owns the railroad land to pay the Government some little pittance for the privilege of fencing and pasturing the Government land. Is that it?

Mr. WARREN. I want the land rented to anybody who wants to rent it, and to the settler first. That is what this bill proposes

But what is the use of talking about some-Mr. TILLMAN. body settling on these odd sections that are fenced if there is no chance for him to get water, and you can not make a living there unless you can get water?

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator suppose the water is all in the railroad sections?

Mr. TILLMAN. No, indeed; but I will gamble that every particle of that water has been preempted and you can not get to it with your stock. If you attempt to take your cattle in there they will not allow you to get to the water, because the sections along the streams have already been taken up.

Mr. WARREN. It is always well when one contends against system to have something to propose in place of it. would the Senator propose to do?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not proposing to do anything. I am trying to get information, so that I may be able to vote intelligently.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will desist for a moment and let me finish what I was saying when interrupted by the Senator from Colorado, then perhaps he will understand some of these points I am trying to make.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not trying to make any point at all. I am trying to get some light. I want to understand.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator is doing all the talking, he must be getting light in the matter.

Mr. TILLMAN. If you have got any, please give me a little,

then. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. Is the Senator through?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; I will sit down. Then the Senator may . illuminate the matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to appeal to the Senator from Wyoming to let this bill be read through. We have been discussing three days a proposition which everybody in the Senate knows will go out upon a point of order as soon as it is raised.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will understand that I rose to facilitate just what he asks. I desire to state the reason why this provision was inserted in the shape it is. I hope to do it, unless there is some reason why I should not occupy the floor. If there is, of course I will yield.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Vermont, in charge of the bill, I am sure is very anxious to get action on it.

Mr. WARREN. Is he more anxious to get action when I am speaking on it than when anybody else is?

Mr. ALDRICH. No. I thought the Senator was only going to speak a few moments.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows I have been interrupted. The proposition, as it came to the committee, was that there would be a plan adopted, first, to protect every settler under every one of the laws now upon the statute books and on any part of the land upon which he saw fit to settle; that if he came where there happened to be an inclosure, he had the benefit of grazing his domestic stock free, and had the first chance to rent the land around him; second, the Government would only organize such grazing districts as it seemed necessary to organize from time to time, the other land remaining just as it now is, open public domain; third, the division of the ranges between different settlers was to be accomplished by local men interested and responsible to their neighbors; fourth, the charges were to be nominal-a fraction of a cent an acre in some cases, and from that up to a few cents an acre in the most favored spots-so that the amount collected presumably would cover only the expenses of administration; that if there were any surplus funds they should go to the States in which the amount was earned.

Mr. President, I am not going further into this, except to say again that the Forester, Mr. Pinchot, is in nowise responsible nor is the President as to the condition I have described; and it is their wish to aid the settlers in overcoming these difficulties and to prevent indiscriminate stamping out and ruination of the ranges. They are simply undertaking to disentangle a difficult and complicated condition, if it may meet the views of those interested in it to have them do so.

I want to say of the Forester that there has been nothing said here to his credit that I do not indorse. I want also to indorse in strongest terms Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture. I want to say, furthermore, that as to the amount appropriated for forestry we must increase it before we finish consideration of this bill, unless it is our desire to do away with our system of forestry. Having said this much, I will yield the

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, in the interest of progress, I ask that this amendment go over until to-morrow. evident that a vote can not be reached on it to-night. I hope to go on with the reading of the bill and to dispose of most of the amendments to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over. Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren] has said in regard to the amendment about grazing, and giving the reasons why it was put in, induces me to make a few remarks, though I do not care particularly to make them now. He says was put in in order to provoke discussion. Everyone knows that it is going out on a point of order; but he wanted to get the opinion of Senators with regard to it. Before the bill is disposed of I want to give my opinion in regard to the grazing proposition.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I can assure him that he will have an opportunity to-morrow when that matter is reached. It will be passed over to-night. I think the point of order will be raised; but the amendment will be held over until there is a reasonable opportunity given Senators who desire to speak upon it.

Mr. WARREN. Either the Senator from Idaho misunder stood me or I did not state myself clearly. The proposition put by me was that if there were a unanimity of feeling about this amendment, then it would go in, but if it were to provoke discussion, it would of course have to go out on a point of order, which any one Senator could effectually make.

Mr. DUBOIS. He wanted to get the views of Senators. proposition is very different from the irrigation proposition to which the Senator from Wyoming has referred. the western Senators introduced bills in regard to irrigation, and finally the eastern and middle western Senators came to us and said, "If you will unite on a bill, we will be glad to pass a national bill for you." We were all pressing for this one thing, a national irrigation act, which would be effective. Senator from Wyoming used a very poor comparison, indeed.

I have been in the House and in the Senate practically for twenty years, and for twenty years the western representatives, with the exception, I think, of the Senator from Wyoming-I may do him an injustice, but my recollection is that he always favored the putting of these lands in the West in the hands of the Government, in order that they might be leased and to take them out of the hands of our people there—I think that the western Senators will express themselves with the same unanimity in regard to this grazing proposition that they always have for the last twenty years, and that they will not come to an agreement in favor of it, as they did to an agreement in favor of the act in regard to national irrigation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes.
Mr. WARREN. The Senator again misstates me, because the RECORD will show that my early contention was that the States themselves should control the grazing lands. The first speech that I ever made here in the Senate was upon that side of the subject. The Senator is again mistaken when he assumes that I stand alone in this contention of the urgent necessity of some kind of regulation for grazing lands.

Mr. DUBOIS. I have always been a strong advocate, Mr. President, of forestry and of the forest reserves. I have advocated that policy on the floor of the Senate. I have defended the head of the Forestry Division. I am a strong advocate of the forestry-reserve policy now. In the western country irrigation, in my judgment, can not continue successfully unless the forests are preserved at the heads of the streams. In my own State, for instance, there are some 2,000,000 acres of land now, under the Carey Act and the national reclamation act, and being made ready for settlers. We have to store water, and all the water is being utilized. There is scarcely any unused water left in any of the Western States. We must utilize every drop possible. We must resort to storage reservoirs as we are doing in the great Jackson Lake just below the Yellowstone Park. At this junction between Wyoming and Idaho and Montana we have built a reservoir which has been partially completed within the last three or four weeks. It adds, as it now built, 800,000 acre-feet of water to the Snake River. This will supply the Minidoka project in Idaho with sufficient water and leave a surplus which is much needed for other lands already under cultivation.

We shall store eventually in that lake the water to irrigate 1,500,000 acres of additional land. All that region is in a forest reserve. It should be, in order to preserve those waters. It is so in regard to the other States.

The northern part of my State, where my colleague lives, has the finest timber land left in the United States. great belt of white-pine timber now standing is in north Idaho. One syndicate alone owns 500,000 acres of that white-pine timber. Without forest reserves, in my judgment, the syndicate would soon own it all. It is not a sufficient answer to say that when they cut this timber it goes into buildings and is made use of by the people of the United States, who enjoy its benefits. That is not a sufficient answer. When these syndicates get through cutting the timber, that is the end of it; the timber is destroyed. Under the forest-reserve policy, after they cut the timber the land is reforested and the timber will be there for the generations which are to come after us. The Government culls out what timber shall be cut, reserving the remainder, so that there is a constant and continuous growth, which will go on for years to come.

The benefits of forestry reserves need no defense, but unfortunately the Forestry Service have gone too fast. They have put too much land into forest reserves. In my own State, in one of their recent reservations they have taken large tracts of grazing land where there is no forest at all. They are stirring up the animosity of the West. Unless they call a halt, they will have the West almost opposed to the policy of forest re-They are not using good judgment. They should go Forest reserves is a new enterprise in our country.

The Forester now has over 100,000,000 acres under his control. He has to patrol them; he has all this force to look after, and it requires great executive ability. He ought to learn by experience. He ought not to add to his responsibilities. I am quite clear that unless a halt is called there will be a storm of protest around his ears from the home seekers, the homesteaders, and the settlers which may injure the whole policy of forest reserves, if not destroy it.

Much less, Mr. President, ought he to attempt to add to his other cares and responsibilities all the grazing land of the West. There are many, many objections to it, in addition to that of putting this added responsibility on the head of the Forestry Bureau. Our people are opposed to it. We think we know if the Government has charge of those grazing lands they will quickly fall into the hands of the large stock owners. my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] said a moment ago, after confessing that he knew nothing about it and was asking for light, they will get control of the water, and thereby control over all the land. Our own people in the different States can take care of these grazing lands better than the United States Government can.

The cattlemen and sheepmen ought not to be compelled to go to-the employees of the Forestry Bureau in order to get permits to graze their herds on these lands. It is well enough for the Forester to regulate the grazing lands in forest reserves, but that Bureau ought to stop the creation of these needless forest reserves. When they create proper forest reserves, it is well for the Forester to regulate the grazing land within them in order to protect them from fire, in order to see that the timber is not destroyed, in order to provide pasturage properly; for a great many reasons it is well that he should take charge of it. I hardly think, however, that he should charge cattle and sheep men for the privilege of grazing on those lands.

Mr. President, I shall not discuss this subject any longer, as it is going out on a point of order; but I wanted to add my protest, as one of the representatives of the Western States, against this attempt which has been continuous in one form and another for twenty years, to get the privilege of leasing and controlling our lands in the West in the hands of the Department at Washington.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 42, line 17. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, under the head of "Bureau of Chemistry," on page 42, line 19, to increase the appropriation for the salary of one chemist, who shall be Chief of Bureau, from $3,500 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 13, to increase the total appropriation for salaries, Bureau of Chemistry, from $46,420 to $47,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 13, after the word "foods," to insert "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of food preservatives, coloring matters, and other substances added to foods, to determine their relation to digestion and to health, and to establish the principles which should guide their use, and to publish the results of such investigations when thought advisable: Provided, That before any adverse publication is made notice shall be given to the owner or manufacturer of the articles in question, who shall have the right to be heard and to introduce testimony before the Secretary of Agriculture, or his representative, either in person or by agent, concerning the suitability of such articles for food, or as to false labeling or branding;" so as to read:

for food, or as to false labeling or branding;" so as to read:

To investigate the composition, adulteration, and false labeling or false branding of foods, drugs, beverages, condiments, and ingredients of such articles, when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable, and also the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of foods, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of food preservatives, coloring matters, and other substances added to foods, to determine their relation to digestion and to health, and to establish the principles which should guide their use, and to publish the results of such investigations when thought advisable: Provided, That before any adverse publication is made notice shall be given to the owner or manufacturer of the articles in question, who shall have the right to be heard and to introduce testimony before the Secretary of Agriculture, or his representative, either in person or by agent, concerning the suitability of such articles for food, or as to false labeling or branding.

Mr. PROCTOR Let that amondment he results.

Mr. PROCTOR. Let that amendment be passed over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 9, after the word "countries," to insert "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such other experts as he may deem necessary, to ascertain the purity of food products and determine what are regarded as adulterations therein, and to establish standards therefor; " so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and to inspect before shipment, when desired by the shippers or owners of these food products, American food products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before said food products are allowed to be sold in the countries mentioned, and for all necessary expenses connected with such inspection and studies of methods of analysis in foreign countries to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such other experts as he may deem necessary, to ascertain the purity of food products and determine what are regarded as adulterations therein, and to establish standards therefor.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask also that that amendment go over. I wish to state that the committee proposes to modify that amendment by striking out the last five words, "and to establish standards therefor."

Mr. KEAN. That does not cure it. It is still subject to the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. That does not alter it. I do not think we ought to insert a provision of this sort on an appropriation bill. is a matter of very great importance and ought to be embodied in a separate measure. Of course, if the Senator from Vermont wants to debate it, I shall not make a point of order; but the point of order is going to be made, and it will save time to take the amendment out.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to say something about it. Let the amendment go over

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification of the proposed amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 45, line 13, afer the word "therein," it is proposed to strike out the words "and to establish standards therefor.'

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Vermont, the amendment as modified will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 46, line 14, after the word "elsewhere," to strike out the period and the word "Employing" and insert a semicolon and the word "employing;" and in line 17, after the word "named," to strike out the period and the word "And" and insert a semicolon and the word "and;" so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 46, line 25, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That no part of this sum shall be used for the payment of compensation or expenses to any officer or other person employed by any State, county, or municipal government" and insert "That any part of this sum used for compensation of or payment of expenses to any officer or other person employed by any State, county, or municipal government, shall be reported to Congress in detail, on the first Monday of December, 1908;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That any part of this sum used for compensation of or payment of expenses to any officer or other person employed by any State, county, or municipal government, shall be reported to Congress in detail, on the first Monday of December, 1908.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to say that the committee modify that amendment by leaving out of line 3, on page 47, the words "part of this;" so that it will read: "That any sum used," etc.; and by striking out the words "nineteen hundred and eight," on page 47, line 7, and inserting the words "in each and every year." If there is to be any discussion in regard to that amendment, I will ask that it also may be passed over, as I wish to submit a statement of what has already been done in regard to that and what is likely to be done.

Mr. LODGE. There will be a good deal of discussion on that, for I think the House provision was a wise one, and ought not proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification of the amendment

The Secretary. On page 47, line 3, after the word "any," it is proposed to strike out the words "part of this;" and on page 47, line 7, after the word "December," it is proposed to strike out "1908" and to insert "in each and every year."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 47, line 8, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Chemistry from $696,420 to $697,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Soils," on page 48, line 24, after the word "buildings," to strike out "not to exceed $4,000 per annum" and insert "in the District of Columbia;" so as to read:

To investigate the soils and conditions of tobacco growth in Cuba, Sumatra, and other tobacco-competing countries; to investigate, in cooperation with the Bureau of Plant Industry, the methods of curing, with particular reference to fermentation; to investigate, with the view of improving, the conditions relating to the supply and sale of domestic tobacco to any foreign country or countries where the business of buying and selling tobacco is conducted by the government; the location of the stations; rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for office and laboratory purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 10, to increase the appropriation for soil investigations from $170,000 to $200,000. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 12, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Soils from $206,980 to $236,980.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether it is now in order to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order to offer an amendment to a committee amendment; but unless the amendment is to a committee amendment it is not in order until after the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not an amendment to a committee amendment; but I think the committee will accept it, and I should like to suggest it to the Senator from Vermont.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be in order after the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether this creates a new bureau in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. LODGE. No. Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly not. It was omitted for some reason. It has been the law for some years—just the same pre-

Mr. PROCTOR. In line 2, page 71, I move to strike out "natural" and insert "national."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the next amendment may be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just reported.

Mr. HEMENWAY. What has become of the amendment just

Mr. LODGE. It is open. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is open.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think the amendment had better go

Mr. PATTERSON. Does the amendment that it is asked shall be passed over relate to grazing lands?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has not yet been reached.

Mr. LODGE. We have not reached the grazing-land amendment. This is an amendment for the survey of the White Mountain and the Appalachian Mountain watersheds, $25,000. It is a matter of great importance to both of those regions. can not conceive of any objection to it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There are very serious objections.

Mr. LODGE. If there is objection, let the amendment go

Mr. PROCTOR. Let both of the amendments be passed over. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment which has just been reported will be passed over, and the amendment beginning in line 7 on page 71 and ending in line 7 on page 73 will likewise be passed over.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to offer and have pending a point of order to the paragraph which has just been passed over, commencing in line 7 on page 71.

Mr. CARTER. That has been passed over for the evening, and I trust the Senator will not interpose a point of order at this time.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to have the point of order pending, not to interfere with any discussion of the matter at all.

The point of order I make is that it is new legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To what does the Senator from Colorado address his point of order Mr. PATTERSON. To the committee amendment on page 71, commencing in line 7, and extending to line 7 on page 73.

Mr. CARTER. As I understand, the Senator from Colorado merely gives notice that at the proper time he will make the point of order against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let it be considered as pending, not to interfere with the discussion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to add to the point of order suggested by the Senator from Colorado that the amendment also proposes general legislation.

Mr. PATTERSON. General and new legislation.

The reading of the bill was resumed, commencing in line 8 on page 73. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 73, after line 14, to insert:

And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell as waste waste paper, or otherwise to dispose of the accumulation of Department files which do not constitute permanent records, and all other documents and publications which have become obsolete or worthless.

Mr. PROCTOR. In line 16 the word "waste" is repeated. move to strike it out where it occurs the first time.

Mr. CARTER. I submit to the chairman that the word should be retained. The word "waste" as used designates the class of property which may be sold in a given manner, and the repetition of the word "waste" is, I think, proper. It reads, "sell as waste, waste paper."

Mr. PROCTOR. It is my mistake. Seeing the word twice, I thought it a repetition. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have a committee amendment to come in at the bottom of page 73, but at the request of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] I will simply offer it now and ask that it be printed and passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the bottom of page 73 the following:

That hereafter, on or before the 1st day of January of each year, the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to Congress, in addition to the estimates now required by law, classified and detailed estimates of every subject of expenditure intended for the Agricultural Department for the next fiscal year and detailed reports of all expenditures under any appropriation for such service during the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will say that that is designed to take the place of the amendment agreed to on page 42, at the close of the Forest Service provisions, and makes it apply to all bureaus.

Mr. President, returning to the first page of the bill, I move to strike out in line 11 the words "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand." That is the salary of the Assistant Secretary. It has been discussed and understood that it should be the same as the others.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. At the bottom of page 63, in line 24, I move to strike out the words "the Territories of." It now reads, "in the Territories of Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico." They are not all strictly Territories. I move to strike out those words, and it will then read: "In Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to have inserted in the RECORD. for the use of the conferees in case of any controversy, letter from the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to a provision in this bill relating to grain inspection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 8, 1996.

Hon. H. C. Hansbrough, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HANSBROUGH: I have yours of December 4, asking for information as to the work that has been done by this Department under the item inserted by you last year in our appropriation bill, giving me authority to establish laboratories for the purpose of testing, weighing, sampling, and inspecting any samples of grain that might be submitted.

under the item inserted by you last year in our appropriation bill, giving me authority to establish laboratories for the purpose of testing, weighing, sampling, and inspecting any samples of grain that might be submitted.

Recognizing the importance of this work, the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry inaugurated a number of lines before the appropriation actually became available, so that by the 1st of July everything was in readiness to go ahead with the establishment of the laboratories. Owing to the many complaints which had been received from foreign buyers of the bad condition of our grain arriving at European ports, a critical study was made of grain cargoes at a number of European ports by an expert. This work was inaugurated early last winter and continued through the spring; in fact, during the entire shipping season. The expert had submitted an exceedingly interesting report, in which he sets forth, on a percentage basis, the condition of the grain reaching European ports. The principal work was done with corn, but there was also a number of cargoes of other grain laspected. In all cases a record was made of the point of shipment and the conditions under which the grain was inspected and handled on this side. The data thus secured, you will see, will be useful ingiving us information as to the value of the inspection service at different Atlantic and Guif ports in the United States. This work is still being continued, and we now have an expert abroad going over practically the same ground, following up and tracing the cargoes as they reach the European ports.

Prior to the 1st of July a careful study of the grain situation with reference to the establishment of the laboratories was made by the officers of the Bureau of Plant Industry. The funds at hand were only sufficient to enable me to establish two laboratories, and after careful consideration it was deemed best to place these at Baltimore and New Orleans, respectively. Baltimore has special advantages in that it is close to Washington and ca proving to be a valuable addition to our force in guiding our scientific experts in the matter of working out details for the establishment of standards.

Recognizing further the necessity of securing as complete data as possible in regard to the methods of inspection and handling of grain at various interior points, the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry directed one of his experienced men to visit Chicago, Milwaukee, Superior, Duluth, Minneapolis, and St. Paul last season to make a thorough study of the systems of inspection, methods of handling grain, cost of inspection, etc. Mr. Estabrook has prepared and submitted a very valuable report, giving full details in regard to all these matters and setting forth the various systems followed, both where there is State inspection and where the inspection is otherwise.

As a further aid to the work several experts of the Bureau of Plant Industry have been engaged in devising apparatus which could be used in inspecting grain and the standardization of the same.

I wish to emphasize at this point the absolute necessity for some system of standardization in all this work. At present there is practically no standard. It has been well said that we are practically in the position, so far as our grain is concerned, that the cloth merchant would be if there were no yardstick or suitable device for measuring. Inspection is now largely a matter of personal judgment, and until it can be placed upon a more precise basis the difficulties arising will continue. It has been found impracticable for inspectors at various places to hold to any definite system for any length of time. Our energies, therefore, have been exerted in the direction of securing apparatus and devices, as already indicated, which would eliminate, to as great an extent as possible, the element of error in judgment.

One of the most important factors in connection with the inspecting and handling of grain is that of the moisture content. The carrying quality of the grain and many other things depend upon the believe it would be highly desirable to extend this work to interior points, as you suggest, establishing four or five more of such laboratories next year. No one recognizes more fully than I do the great importance of this subject, especially to the people of the Northwestern States, and I am anxious to do everything that can be done to help

States, and I am anxious to do everything that can be done to help them.

It should be borne in mind, however, that we still have much to do in the way of establishing standards and that this is the first thing toward which our energies should be directed. The establishment of standards and the acceptance of the same by the grain trade will result in uniformity, and uniformity is bound to do away with a great many of the complaints that have arisen. You realize, of course, that in such a complicated question as this we must go forward with caution and conservatism. It would be unwise at this time for the Government to attempt to establish arbitrary standards which would not stand the test of actual practice. In fact, the Government would be placed in the same position as the State inspection service in many of the States is now placed, owing to the entire lack of anything like uniformity.

Th gradual establishment of laboratories working along the lines indicated will result in uniformity of grades, and this very uniformity will lift the handling and inspection of grain from its present very unsatisfactory state to one that will have the confidence of both producers and handlers of grain.

If I can furnish any additional information along the lines set forth, please command me.

Very sincerely,

James Wilson, Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT: Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PENROSE. I was about to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I will with-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will press it.

Mr. PROCTOR. There are some amendments which will not lead to discussion, and I should be glad to have them disposed of to-night. It will take but a few minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Pennsylvania when this matter shall have been disposed of.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of page 73

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. At the bottom of page 73, it is proposed to

That there shall be, and hereby is, annually appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid as hereinafter provided, to each State and Territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of agricultural colleges now established, or which may hereafter be established, in accordance with the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, the sum of $5,000, in addition to the sums named in the said act, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and an annual increase of the amount of such appropriation thereafter for four years by an additional sum of $5,000 over the preceding year, and the annual sum to be paid thereafter to each State and Territory shall be $50,000, to be applied only for the purposes of the agricultural colleges as defined and limited in the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890.

That the sum hereby appropriated to the States and Territories for the further endowment and support of the colleges shall be paid by, to, and in the manner prescribed by the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, entitled "An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established under the provisions of the said act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the expenditure of the said money shall be governed in all respects by the provisions of the said act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the expenditure of the said act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the expenditure of the said act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the expenditure of the said act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the said act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the expenditure of the said act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the expenditure of the said act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and the expenditure of the said act of Congress approved July 2, 186

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota how much the amendment carries?

Under existing law the agricultural colleges Mr. NELSON. in each of the States and Territories are entitled to an annual appropriation, and are receiving it, of $30,000.

Mr. PROCTOR. That is under the Morrill law.
Mr. NELSON. This amendment proposes to add $5,000 each year for four years, until the whole amount comes to $50,000, and after the end of four years the appropriation is to remain at $50,000. What induces me to present the amendment is that in a great many of the States, especially in the South, they are now establishing county and rural agricultural schools, and the object of the amendment is to enlarge the scope of our agricultural colleges so that they can fit teachers for these local agricultural coneges so that they can in teachers for these local agricultural schools. It amounts to $5,000 each year for four years, and every agricultural college and experimental station that I have been in communication with highly favors it.

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota, in view of the very great importance of the matter proposed, that the amount indicated by him is scarcely enough, and without detaining the Senate I want to state one fact.

In the State of Georgia there have been established within the past year eleven of these district colleges, supported in the manner indicated, not simply by this fund, but by local contributions; and while I have not had time to make the calculation, I am sure that the amount indicated by the Senator will not be sufficient to be of material benefit.

Mr. NELSON. I will state to the Senator from Georgia that I entirely concur with him, and I should be glad to make it more; but I feel satisfied that that is impossible. This will be a little help, and we had better take this if we can get it.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator is satisfied that that is all we can get, of course I concur with him.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to say there has been no addition to the appropriation for agricultural colleges since the original act established them, under the bill introduced by Senator Morrill; and I happen to know that it was the Senator's intention the last year of his life to propose an amendment substantially like that of the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and

UNALLOTTED LANDS IN ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 24987) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus or unallotted lands in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, with Senate amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference,

Mr. WILLIAMS. What are the amendments?
Mr. SHERMAN. There are two main amendments. One is changing the rate of interest the United States is to pay on the fund which is to be put into the Treasury. The House fixes the rate of interest on such fund at 3 per cent. The Senate changed it to 5 per cent.

The other provision is an appropriation for $15,000, which should be made reimbursable, but the Senate did not make it so.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York offer an amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I ask unanimous consent to nonconcur and go to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. Sherman, Mr. Burke of South Dakota, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

HEZEKIAH DEZARN.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill H. R. 830, entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Hezekiah Dezarn."

The resolution was agreed to.

MAKING FINAL PROOF IN DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25513) extending the time for making final proof in certain desert-land entries.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all desert-land entrymen, under the Benton Water Company's canal, in Benton County; State of Washington, who would be required under existing law to make final proof during the year 1907, are hereby given an additional year in which to make such final proof.

The Clerk read the following amendment recommended by the committee:

Add at the end of the bill the following: "Provided, That each entryman claiming the benefits of this act shall, within ninety days after its passage and approval, file in the local land office of the district in which the lands embraced in his entry are located an affidavit describing his lands and stating that he expects to irrigate the same with water from the canal of said company."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Jones of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LOBBYING AT NATIONAL CAPITOL.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Speaker, on the 12th day of February I introduced the bill H. R. 25617, a bill to prohibit lobbying at the National Capitol. I think the terms of the bill are more comprehensive than I intended; that they include a class or classes that I did not intend to include. The bill was almost literally from the Georgia statute and aimed at railway lobbying at the Georgia State capitol." It was my intent that the bill should effect that object here. If it is a proper parliamentary procedure, I should like, by unanimous consent, to withdraw the bill from the files of the House. If that is not correct, I would like to ask that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the consideration of the bill and that the bill lie on the table. I will then reintroduce it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of the bill indicated and that the same do lie on the table.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it the desire of the gentleman from Florida simply to confine the provision of the bill against lobbying railroad companies?

Mr. LAMAR. It is, I will read the amendment.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this does not seem to me to be a matter for debate.

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman asked unanimous consent, and, as usual, there is a little play to see whether he is going to get it or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMAR. I will make the bill express what I intended in the first instance, and that is a bill to prohibit lobbying at the National Capitol in behalf of railroads or railway companies engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. GARRETT. Why not forbid lobbying in regard to other things?

Mr. LAMAR. I am introducing my own bill. I haven't the slightest objection to the gentleman introduced his own bill
Mr. GARRETT. But the gentleman introduced his own bill in the first instance.

Mr. LAMAR. I am asking to withdraw my own bill and substitute that which I intended and desired

Mr. GARRETT. Well, it is a personal matter, and I do not object.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair understands the request of the gentleman from Florida, it is to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the bill indicated and that the bill do lie on the table. Is that correct?

That is correct. Mr. LAMAR.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMAR. Now I will reintroduce the bill as amended. The SPEAKER. That will have to be done through the box. BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER AT PITTSBURG, PA.

Mr. BARCHFELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25691) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Liberty Bridge Company, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Liberty Bridge Company, a corporation created and organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, its successors and assigns, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto over the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, from a point of intersection by the center line of South Third street, in the city of Pittsburg, projected to and intersecting the United States harbor line at the south shore of said river, thence by a right line coincident with the center line of said street and being the proposed center line of said bridge, to a point of intersection with the United States harbor line at the north shore of said river.

SEC. 2. troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads leading to the said bridge, and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal telegraph and telephone purposes: *Provided*, That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of railroad trains over-the same and the approaches thereto, and foot passengers and vehicles shall have the right of passage over said bridge, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies or others, or any one of them desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in the use of said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 3. That said bridge shall be so built and located that navigation under it shall be reasonably free, easy, and unobstructed, and to secure this condition of navigation the company building the said bridge shall submit to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their examination and approval a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location thereof, showing sufficient soundings to fully develop the river bed for one-quarter mile above and the sand distance below the bridge, and until the said plan and location are approved by the Secretary of War and unit the said plan and location are approved by the Secretary of War and unit the said company shall, at its own expense, make from time to time such changes shall have previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Secre

Mr. BARCHFELD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following additional amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Barchfeld, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF MINERAL LANDS, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution 415, as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read: The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 415.

Whereas on the 16th day of April, 1906, W. H. Andrews, Delegate to Congress from New Mexico, presented a petition to Congress signed by G. Hauser, H. R. Taylor, and 28 other citizens of said Territory, which petition is as follows, namely:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your petitioners, respectfully represent

That for many years last past the lands comprised in townships 10 north, range 11 west, and 11 north, range 12 west, New Mexico principal meridian, have been commonly known to contain large deposits of cipal meridian, have been commonly known to contain large deposits of copper ores.

That said lands are within the area granted to the Atlantic and Pacific (now Santa Fe) Railroad Company; that the act of Congress granting said lands to said railroad company excluded and excepted from the terms of the transfer all mineral land, should any such be found to exist, excepting coal and iron.

That some fifteen years ago the railroad company sold a large tract of their lands in the vicinity of the aforesaid townships to Mitchell Brothers; that Mr. Spaulding, father-in-law of Mr. Mitchell, made an examination of the tracts of land to be purchased, and refused to advise the Mitchells to purchase the aforesaid townships, giving as a reason, as he stated on several occasions, that said townships contained copper in such quantities that the lands could not be held under the railroad grant; that at such time no patent had been issued to the railroad company for the lands in said townships; that mining and prospecting and the location of claims has been going on in said townships for many years, and about the year 1900 a large number of mining claims were located in the aforesaid townships and mining has been actively prosecuted ever since.

That about the year 1902 a patent was issued conveying to the Santa Fe Railroad Company all odd-numbered sections of land in said townships; that said patent by its terms and its words excludes and excepts from the terms of the transfer all mineral lands, should any such be found to exist, except coal and iron.

That during the past year the Santa Fe Railroad Company, through its agents, has filed upon or pretended to file upon a number of legal subdivisions of the even-numbered sections of land in said townships, by virtue of forest lieu selections.

That the agents of the railway company who went out to post the notices of such selections on said lands in said townships misrepresented their mission by stating to several miners and prospectors that said agents were going into another neighborhood to look at some timber lands; that the notices of the selection of said lands were posted, if posted at all, in out-of-the-way places very near the ground, where it was only by accident that said notices were discovered at all.

That as the situation row is, those who have located mining claims on the public domain of the United States, and spent a number of years developing same, will now be compelled to yield up their property to the Santa Fe Railroad Company, or spend a great deal of time and money contesting in order to establish their legal rights.

Believing that when persons in good faith locate on the public domain their rights should be protected by the Government, we respectfully petition:

fully petition

That an examination of the lands in townships 10 north, range 11 west, and 11 north, range 12 west, New Mexico principal meridian, be made under authority of and at the expense of the Government; that after a full hearing such of said lands as are found to contain mineral be withdrawn from the grant to the railroad company and any patent covering such lands canceled, same having been issued either through mistake as to the character of said lands or procured by fraud and misrepresentation as to the character of the land.

II. That the laws requiring notices of selections of public lands be so amended as to require such notice to be posted on a board designated therefor at the post-office nearest the land so selected.

III.

That such other legislation be enacted as will make it forever impossible for any person, drm, or corporation to ever procure title to large areas of mineral lands in defiance of the rights of the real discoverers and of the actual settlers in said tract.

Respectfully,

G. HAUSER, H. R. TAYLOR, (And 28 others).

Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby respectfully directed to advise the House of Representatives of the United States what, if any, disposition has been made of the lands comprised in townships 10 north, range 11 west, and 11 north, range 12 west, New Mexico principal meridian.

Second and whether any of said lands contain deposits of contains.

ico principal meridian.

Second. And whether any of said lands contain deposits of copper or any other minerals except coal and iron, and whether any mining or prospecting had been done on said lands or any location of mining claims made thereon prior to 1902, when patents were issued to the Santa Fe Railway Company for the odd-numbered sections in said townships.

Third. And also whether said railroad company has, for either itself, its agents, or any assignee of any of its lieu forest-reserve land scrip, filed such scrip on any of the even-numbered sections of land in said townships; and if so, by whom and when were such filings made, and were they made on any mineral lands on which mining locations were previously made.

With the following amendments:

In line 2 strike out the word "advise" and insert the word "insistent

orm."
In line 3, after the word "States," insert the words "if not inconstent with the public interests."
In line 12, after the word "patents," strike out the word "were" and insert "are alleged to have been."
In line 4, page 5, after the word "any," insert the words "of said;" that it will read "any of said mineral lands."
Strike out the preamble.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of this resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will state that in the reservation known as the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Reservation, in New Mexico, there were certain township lands that mining prospectors had been on before the railroad company had had its grant extended over those lands. These prospectors have expended quite a lot of money in developing mines on this property. It seems that the railroad and the miners are contesting as to whether it is mineral land, and the question is to ascertain from the Secretary of the Interior what reports have been made. We are asking for information as to what reports he has on file relative to this being mineral or nonmineral land.

nonmineral land.

Mr. PAYNE. This is only to obtain information?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Information strictly, that is all.

It comes from the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken ont.

There was no objection.

EXTENDING TIME FOR OX BOW POWER COMPANY TO CONSTRUCT DAM ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25672) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Ox Bow Company, of South Dakota, to construct a dam across the Missouri River," which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of chapter 1821 of the laws of 1894, approved April .28, 1904, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the structures herein authorized shall be commenced within one year and completed within six years from the date of approval thereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

TO RATIFY LEASE WITH SENECA INDIANS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24125) to ratify a certain lease with the Seneca Nation of Indians, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a lease bearing date September 21, 1906, between the Seneca Nation of Indians on the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, in the State of New York, and Charles M. L. Ashby, of Boston, Mass., is hereby ratified and confirmed.

With the following amendments:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "Boston, Mass." and insert the words "Eric County, N. Y.," in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, 1 would like to have some explanation regarding this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to ratify a lease made by the Seneca Nation of Indians to the man named therein, to be used mainly for the purpose of taking sand from that portion of the reservation which is not allotted, that por-tion of the reservation which is called "common." The lease The lease is made by the council of the nation in regular assembly, and its ratification is desired by the nation.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Has this resolution been favorably reported by the committee?

The committee has reported it unanimously: Mr. SHERMAN. and there is provision in the lease, of course, for compensation, $5 per acre for every acre used, plus 10 cents per yard for every yard of sand which is carried away from the reservation, plus 8 per cent in the net profits of the transaction.

Mr. SULZER. Then, as I understand the gentleman, this lease only refers to sand, not to oil or anything of that kind?

Mr. SHERMAN. It might refer to other things. The lease says "to enter thereon, dig thereon, excavate thereon, work thereon, and remove therefrom such sand, metal, or mineral products as he or they may see fit or not, etc.," but the expectation is, I understand, to remove sand. That is the prime object of the lease. There may be some others, but the lease provides that if other materials are found there is an additional royalty to be paid to the Indians thereon.

Mr. SULZER. I think this resolution ought to specify sand and no other mineral.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution is simply to confirm the The lease is made by the Indians. Here is the original Now, this is a proposition to confirm the lease; that is all this resolution is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me to ask this question, I think we may get at an explanation. I believe the Indian agent has agreed to this under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. The lease was made subject to the knowledge of the Indian Office, but these lands are not like ordinary Indian lands where the Department has the right to pass upon a lease to approve or disapprove of it. This is not land the title to which was in the United States. It is a peculiar situation, that the old colony of Massachusetts owned the land and it came into the possession of these Indian tribes, so that the Attorney-General has held that the Department has no right to act upon a lease as it has in other cases

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if any oil or iron or other minerals have been found on this land of the Seneca Indians in the State of New York?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, I think oil has been found on them. I do not know whether any other substance has been or not.

Mr. SULZER. Is not the real object of this resolution to get the oil and not the sand?

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand not. I understand this lease is not made for the purpose of procuring oil. I got that statement from the gentleman from New York [Mr. Alexander], who is not now in the Hall and who is the introducer of the bill.

When was this resolution favorably reported Mr. SULZER.

unanimously from your committee?

Mr. SHERMAN. January last—a few weeks ago.
Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I am in some doubt about this matter, and would like to have it go over for the present, so that I can investigate the subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

PROHIBITING SHANGHAIING IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25190) to amend sections 1, 2, and 3 of an act entitled "An act to prohibit shanghaiing in the United States," approved June 28, 1906.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

pealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Sherley, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MORRISON COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8377) to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River in the county of Morrison, State approved June 4, 1906.

which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River in the county of Morrison, State of Minnesota," approved June 4, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Section 1. That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Pike Rapids Power Company, a Minnesota corporation, its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain across the Mississippi River a dam, canal, and works necessary incident thereto for water power and supply purposes at a point between sections 20, 29, and 32 in township 128 north, range 29 west of the fifth principal meridian, and sections 17 and 20, in township 39, range 32 west of the fourth principal meridian, in Morrison County, Minn.: Provided, That the plans for the construction of said dam and appurtenant works shall be submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the commencement of the construction of the same: And provided further, That the said the Pike Rapids Power Company, its successors or assigns, shall not deviate from such plans after such approval, either before or after the completion of said structures, unless the modifications of such plans shall have previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That there shall be placed and maintained in connection with said dam a sluiceway so arranged as to permit logs, timber, and lumber to pass around, through, and over said dam without unreasonable delay or hindrance and without toll or charges: And provided further, That the dam shall be so constructed that the Government of the United States may at any time construct in connection therewith a suitable lock for navigation purposes, and may at any time, without compensation, control the said dam so far as shall be necessary for the purposes of navigation, but shall not destroy the water power deve

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, for the present I object.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR CEMETERY PURPOSES.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6229) to authorize the sale of public lands for cemetery purposes, together with certain committee amendments and one amendment which I offer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it cnacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and convey to any municipal corporation, religious or fraternal association, or private corporation, empowered by the laws under which such corporation or association is organized or incorporated to hold real estate for cemetery purposes, not to exceed 40 acres of any unappropriated nonmineral public lands of the United States for cemetery purposes, upon the payment therefor by such corporation or association of the sum of not less than $1.25 per acre.

Also the following amendments, recommended by the committee, were read:

In line 4 strike out the words "municipal corporations." In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert the word "eighty."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he proposes to offer an amendment to the effect that the land shall revert to the United States in case it is not used?

Mr. FRENCH. The Clerk has my amendment to that effect;

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this ought to be explained.

Mr. FRENCH. The bill is simply a general bill to obviate the necessity of passing numerous special bills granting a little tract of land to some church or some fraternal organization for cemetery purposes. The words "municipal organizations" the committee recommended should be stricken from the bill, because there is already a general law covering that. The bill simply extends this privilege to fraternal, charitable, and religious organizations, and organizations for cemetery purposes. have also offered an amendment that a good many seem to think should be offered, providing that the land should revert to the United States should the same cease to be used for the purposes granted in the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, as to the price.

Mr. FRENCH. Not less than $1.25 an acre, or at $1.25, I believe.

Mr. FINLEY. Is it intended to fix that sum as the standard price of lands to any and all such corporations?

Mr. FRENCH. At not less than $1.25 per acre, and the definite amount rests with the Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: This is land taken by religious and charitable associations, but as I understand to be taken by them solely for cemetery purposes.

Mr. FRENCH. It must be used exclusively for cemetery purposes, and the amendment I propose to offer provides that if it should cease to be used for cemetery purposes it shall revert to the Government.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "acre," in line 2, page 2, the fol-

Amend by adding, and lowing:
"Provided, That title to any land disposed of under the provisions of this act shall revert to the United States should the land cease to be used for the purpose herein provided."

Describe gentleman mean by that amend-

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman mean by that amendment all of the land or any part of it? Suppose this corporation should dispose of a part of the lands?

Mr. FRENCH. I would have no objection to saying "the land or any part thereof," if I may have the opportunity.

Mr. FINLEY. I think that should go in, at least.

Mr. LACEY. The difficulty of that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention-

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That title to any lands, or any part thereof, disposed of under the provisions of this act shall revert to the United States should the lands cease to be used for the purpose herein provided.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I will object to that amendment in that form. That amendment would practically nullify the bill, because it is only 80 acres anyhow, and suppose there was some one buried on 40 acres, and no one buried on the other 40, then the other 40 would be forfeited.

Mr. FINLEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows

A bill (H. R. 25629) to repeal the act of February 27, 1901, granting authority to the East St. Louis and St. Louis Bridge and Construction Company, of the city of East St. Louis, Ill., to build, own, operate, and maintain a bridge across the Mississippi River.

Be it enacted, etc.. That the act approved February 27, 1901, entitled "An act amending an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county,' approved March 3, A. D. 1897," granting consent to the East St. Louis and St. Louis Bridge and Construction Company, of the city of East St. Louis, of the county of St. Clair and State of Illinois, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, its assigns, successor, grantees, mortgagee, representatives, and successors in interest, to build, own, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto, as hereinafter described, across the Mississippi River from some point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county to the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MURPHY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25474) to amend sections 5 and 6 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with Indian tribes, and to protect the same."

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, to save time, for the present I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the Record on the public schools of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve self into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25745)sundry civil appropriation bill; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may be closed at the conclusion of the statement of myself and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR], not to exceed an hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like the attention of the chairman of the committee. I desire to know if there would be given opportunity for debate on some of the questions that are in this bill. I refer particularly to the item that makes appropriation for the special service of the General Land Office.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman from South Dakota that one reason why general debate is not extended or asked for any greater length of time is in view of that suggestion, that there are a number of items in the bill that will necessarily provoke a great deal of discussion under the five-minute rule. There will be no disposition on the part of myself to unreasonably curtail debate when those several items are reached in the reading of the bill. Another reason, Mr. Speaker, for making this request is that it is getting somewhat late in the session, the bill is a very large one, covering 200 pages, the reading of it will require a great deal of time, and we ought to pass it and send it to the Senate just as soon as we possibly It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I ask unanimous consent that general debate may be closed with the statement of myself and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Taylob], which statements shall not exceed one hour.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to give that unanimous consent so far as I am individually concerned; but since the chairman of the committee rose I have had several requests for time. Consulting only my personal feelings, individually, I would be perfectly willing, but there are matters that gentlemen on this side wish to discuss.

Mr. TAWNEY, I think I know the items in the bill which the gentlemen wish to discuss who have requested time from the gentleman from Alabama. They can have ample opportunity for discussion when those items are reached in the bill. I have in mind what the gentleman refers to, something in connection with St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. I wish that time should be allowed on that proposition. The gentleman from Florida desires to discuss the report of the investigation of the Insane Asylum. I have requests from one or two on this side who desire to discuss that proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the gentleman from Alabama and other gentlemen can readily see that if time is given on one side for the discussion of that question it will necessarily require a like amount of time on this side. We will then get into a discussion between the minority and the majority members of the special committee appointed for the purpose of investigating the administration of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, and I hope the gentleman will not object to my request.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Individually, I have no objection. Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to the question raised by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but I wish to say that there are one or two important matters contained in the bill on which a liberal time for debate ought to be allowed, the time to be occupied to be pertinent to the question, as there are two or three matters proposed to be omitted from the bill for the first time in the history of this country.

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman from Ohio has asked the question that I desired to ask, whether there would be given a liberal time under the five-minute rule for the discussion of those questions

Mr. TAWNEY. I have already stated that there will be no attempt on my part to curtail the time for discussion pertinent to the subject under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] have half an hour.

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not consent to that.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. CLARK of Florida and Mr. SULZER. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri object? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will unless I can get a reply from the chairman of the committee. I have no doubt but what you would carry out what you say in perfect good faith so far as you are concerned; but there are 385 other members, and any one of them can cut off any man from further debate after five minutes by objecting.

Mr. TAWNEY. . I want to make the further statement: This

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I will object unless the gentle-man from Minnesota agrees that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] shall have half an hour.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. Mr. TAWNEY. I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that upon going into the Committee of the Whole, after the statement, I shall move to rise and return to the House for the purpose of closing general debate.

The question is on the motion that the The SPEAKER. House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to. Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 25745—the sundry civil appropriation bill with Mr. Watson in the chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. SULZER. I object, unless the gentleman from Minnesota gives the gentleman from Florida half an hour. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. I object.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.
The Clerk began the reading of the bill.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask what page is the Clerk reading from?

The CHAIRMAN. Page 26.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to have the Chair ask the Clerk if he is skipping at all in his reading?

Mr. TAWNEY. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I have the right to make this inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not inform the gentleman from Mississippi about that. The presumption is that every officer of the House is performing his duty in accordance with the rules of the House, and all that the Chair can do is to direct the Clerk to be very careful in turning the pages, which the Chair has no doubt the Clerk has already done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the question for the reason that I have just been informed by a Member of the House—a Republican—that the Clerk did skip about a page. I did not notice it myself, but I should like to have the Chair tell the Clerk that the chair has already instructed the CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already instructed the Clerk.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I now renew my request that the further first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, when the request was made Mr. WILLIAMS. before there was objection made by a Member of the House who is not now in his seat.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will read. The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. GRIGGS. I rise to ask unanimous consent to suspend the further reading of the bill and give the gentleman from The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the further first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] be permitted to speak on the bill for a period of thirty minutes. Is there objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. I object.
Mr. SULZER. You take the responsibility. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Burke of Pennsylvania having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 24991. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill (H. R. 14464) for the relief of Wiley Corbett.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I note that the river and harbor bill has just been reported from the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference on the river and harbor bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is that in order when the committee rises informally?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent only. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will appoint the conferees.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the river and harbor bill Mr. Burton of Ohio, Mr. Dovener, and Mr. Bankhead.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session,

Mr. SULZER (when the Clerk had reached page 116 of the bill). Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] have thirty minutes to address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] have thirty minutes to address the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. I object.

The Clerk proceeded and finished the reading of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in submitting the sundry civil appropriation bill to the House for its consideration and passage I feel that it is my duty to call attention to some facts which tend to indicate the probable aggregate appropriation which will be made at this session of Congress. I do this in the hope that from now until the close of the session each individual Member may feel and realize the necessity of exercising the utmost care in the discharge of his duty as a Representative in respect to appropriations, and also for the purpose of preventing—what is now threatened—a larger aggregate of appropriations at this session of Congress than at any previous session in the history of the Government.

The responsibility for the appropriations which are passed by Congress does not rest upon the Committee on Appropriations alone. Our responsibility in this respect is an individual as well as a collective responsibility. Nor is it a party responsibility, for in respect to the appropriation of money by Congress for the expenditures of the Government there can be but one policy regardless of which political party is in control of Congress or in control of the Government, and that policy is the policy of economical expenditure of the public funds which should at all times obtain. Therefore, the representatives of both parties, whichever may be in control, should so act as not to make unnecessary appropriations or enlarge necessary appropriations beyond reasonable demands of the public service.

It is not possible at this time in the closing hours of the session to forecast with accuracy the total aggregate appropriations for the fiscal year 1908. We have, however, sufficient information to enable us to predict with some certainty that unless proposed increases in appropriations are not checked this session of Congress will, in the aggregate amount appropriated, exceed the aggregate appropriations of any previous session. The facts upon which this statement is based are presented, as I have before said, in the hope that both branches of Congress, as well as the conference committees of the two Houses now considering appropriation bills, may scrutinize more closely the necessities of the public service and the necessity of appropriating for specific objects than has been done thus far during this session.

I do this, Mr. Chairman, not in any spirit of criticism, but for the purpose of appealing to the membership of this House to aid in every way possible in keeping down the appropriations and to keep out of the appropriation bills unnecessary amounts, so that the record of this session at the end may not be what it now gives promise of being.

The Government of the United States is expending altogether too much money in performing functions that do not belong to it, in the doing of that which it does not devolve upon the Federal Government to do, but upon the States. Congress at this time is altogether too anxious to accept from the States the voluntary surrender of the exercise of rights reserved to the States and the exercise of which involves the expenditure of money. To this, more than to any other one thing, may be attributed the rapidly increasing demands upon the Federal Treasury and the increase in the aggregate of appropriations for civil expenses.

The total estimates for appropriations for all purposes for the fiscal year 1908, as submitted in the Book of Estimates at the beginning of this session, aggregate $895,690,643.68. These regular estimates are exceeded in five of the annual supply bills which have passed the House, or have passed both Houses and are now in conference, by $22,919,298.96. In addition to this the obligations created by legislation now pending between the two Houses in the river and harbor bill and the naval bill equal $73,634,523. In addition to this we have supplemental estimates for the sundry civil expenses of the Government of $13,000,000, making a total of $1,005,244,468.64, which includes the amount of the annual estimates, or the permanent and annual appropriations, supplemental estimates, and obligations fixed by the river and harbor and naval bills, and by the supplemental sundry civil estimates. If we assume that the appropriations as finally passed will equal in the aggregate these estimates less 10 per cent, or if they carry only 90 per cent of the estimates, the amount appropriated would then be $904,720,-021.78, which would be more than has ever been appropriated at any session of Congress, in war or peace, since the beginning of our Government.

It is not possible at this time to estimate with certainty the revenues of the Government for the fiscal year 1908, for which we are now making these large appropriations; but taking the revenues of the current year and the increase in these revenues over the revenues of the last fiscal year, which were greater than ever before in any fiscal year, as a basis, it is fair to estimate that the revenues of the Government during the fiscal year 1908 will not greatly, if at all, exceed the sum of $804,573,246. It will be seen, therefore, that if the several appropriation bills now under consideration are not materially reduced before they are finally passed, we must expect, and will have to take the consequences for, a deficit in our public expenditures, which deficit, under the estimates which I have made, may reach the sum of $100,000,000.

It may be said that a part of these appropriations are reimbursable to the Treasury, notably the $25,000,000 appropriation to carry on the work of constructing the isthmian canal. This I grant you, sir, is true, and to that extent this deficit would be reduced; but I want to call the attention of every Member of this House the fact that in the statement I have just made I have not included appropriations which must be made, or that have been made, during this session for which no estimates have been submitted, but which appropriations are required and made necessary by the terms of the legislation which we have enacted at this session or will enact before the close of the session. There are several other reimbursable items, and there may be some permanent appropriations which may not be drawn upon during the next fiscal year; but, Mr. Chairman, the amount of the reimbursable items for which we are now appropriating may be offset by the additional amounts made necessary to meet the obligations created by laws which we have enacted and for which no estimates have been submitted at this session of Con-

I feel confident that I am not overdrawing the situation as it presents itself to both Houses of Congress to-day. In fact, I have eliminated many items which at the end of this session I fear will be found in some of the appropriation bills when they are approved by the Chief Executive. I therefore appeal to the patriotic sense of duty of every Member of this House to do what he can to aid in keeping down the aggregate of our appropriations to the extent that it is consistent with the best interests of the public service to do so.

In this connection I want to call attention to another fact. The aggregate amount carried by the regular annual appropriation bills coming from the Committee on Appropriation, namely, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, the fortifications, the legislative, the pension, and the sundry civil appropriation bills, is $228,330,021.66, as reported to the House. The regular estimates submitted to Congress at the beginning of the session for these various Departments and purposes, carried in these bills, was in the aggregate $297,413,438.48. In other words, the bills as reported out of the Committee on Appropriations reduced the estimates $9,083,416.74. The other eight regular annual appropriation bills, namely, the agricultural, Army, diplomatic and consular, Indian, Military Academy, naval, post-office, and river and harbor, as reported to the House from the committees having them in charge, carried appropriations aggregating $434,634,340.02. The regular annual estimates for these bills as submitted to Congress at the beginning of the session aggregated $448,390,825.28, or $13,656,545.26 more than the amount the bills carried as they were reported to the House. So far as the House is concerned, in dealing with the estimates submitted to Congress, I maintain that we have a very creditable record. Most of the reductions, however, in the bills last named are on account of the large reduction in the naval appropriation bill and also a reduction in the Army appropriation bill, both of which bills notwithstanding carry very large authorizations for the expenditure of money, part of which must be met during the fiscal year 1908.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let us hope that when the final record of this session is made up the appropriations will not aggregate the amount which present conditions indicate, and that they will be within the revenues of the Government.

In respect to the bill under consideration, the subcommittee has spent over four weeks in its consideration and in analyzing the estimates for the sundry civil expenses during the fiscal year 1908. The estimates submitted aggregate $114,094,517. The bill carries $103.872,540.63. This includes $24,979,000 toward the construction of the Panama Canal and is reimbursable to the Treasury of the United States, so that the net amount carried which will be a charge against the revenues of the Government for the fiscal year 1908 aggregates $78,993,540.23, which is very considerably less than the current sundry civil appropriation bill.

I shall not at this time occupy the time or attention of the House in discussing the details of the bill. The bill your committee has reported to the House we believe to be as free from objections as it is possible to make a bill of this magnitude. Your committee has given the utmost care and scrutiny to all of the estimates and the most careful consideration to every project proposed. The sundry civil bill, unlike all the other appropriation bills, except the river and harbor bill, is practically a new bill every year. It provides for new service, it provides for new projects, and therefore requires more time, more attention, more scrutiny in its consideration than does any of the great appropriation bills. We have provided amply, I think, for every branch of the public service, notwithstanding the fact that we have reduced the estimates and recommend far less than has been estimated for the sundry civil expenses during the next fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy any more time, and I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Taylor], such time as he may desire for any personal statement he may wish to make, and reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]
Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama rose,

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. Chairman-Mr. SULZER.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. SULZER. I was going to ask for recognition. Nobody else seems to want to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Tay-LOR] has been recognized by the Chair, and has the floor.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yielded such time as the gentleman may desire for his personal explanation, and reserve the balance of the time.

The Chair so understood. The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to review with the chairman of the committee the expenditures of this Congress nor the actions of other committees in charge of appropriations other than those of the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member. My remarks shall be confined entirely to this bill and appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the current fiscal year. It will be found by an examination into the history of this particular bill that in 1887 practically $23,000,000 was the amount of this bill. Ten years later, in 1897, $33,000,000 was the amount of the bill, an increase of some 50 per cent in the ten years from 1887 until 1897. In the ten years from 1897 until now you will find that this bill to-day carries $104,000,000, which is about three times as much, or 300 per cent increase in the last ten years. This bill is purely a business bill. There is not a particle of politics in the bill which is now before the House that I can find. It was practically agreed upon unanimously by the subcommittee, after a most careful investigation into every item of which it is composed. There were differences among us, but those differences simply inquired into what was the best to be done under the circumstances with every individual item, so when it was brought into the general, or full, committee the same almost practical unanimity was found there. There are not a half dozen points of difference between the subcommittee and the full committee on all the great and various items that are comprehended in this bill. For that reason, and because it comprehends such a variety of detail, I will not attempt to go into any of the questions that divided the committee, either in the subcommittee or in the whole committee, except to say that they are confined to three or four questions, such as the investigation of the conditions surrounding woman and child labor, the transportation of silver coin, and reductions in the work of the Geological Survey. I apprehend you will find that these reductions will be the most serious question debated in the further consideration of this bill. The size of this bill, so far as I can see, only demonstrates the size of this country and the great increase in our business.

I am ready, so far as I am personally concerned, Mr. Chairman, to proceed with the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Watson, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25745, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the naval appropriation bill with Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the naval appropriation bill, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for conference

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What bill is that?

The SPEAKER. The naval appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say I have conferred with Mr. FOSS. the leading minority Member [Mr. MEYER], and this action is agreeable to him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right, I have no objection; but I did not happen to see any of the minority Members of the committee in their seats.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the following con-

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Foss, Mr. Loudenslager, and Mr. Meyer.

UNITED STATES COURT, DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 22334), to amend an act to regulate the sitting of the United States courts within the district of South Carolina, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and the Senate amendments were agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 25745) and pending that motion I move that general debate on the bill be closed, and upon that motion I ask for the previous question.

Mr. SULZER. I object, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Taw-NEY] moves the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further con-sideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and, pending that motion, moves that general debate be closed on that bill, and demands the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS)—ayes 161, noes 41.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that general debate on the bill be closed.

The question was taken: and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. Sulzer)—ayes 165, noes 47.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Fifteen gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawner] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.
Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. WATson in the chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate has been closed, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alexandria, Minn., post-office: For site and for completion of building under present limit, $15,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five min-

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in making this mo-AIT. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in making this motion at this time is to call the attention of the House to the fact that this morning when this bill was taken up I asked that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] might have thirty minutes in which to discuss a question of great public moment concerning the long-delayed reports on the investigation of the St. Elizabeth Insane Asylum. The gentleman from Minnesota Mr. Elizabeth Insane Asylum. St. Elizabeth Insane Asylum. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] in charge of the bill refused to grant my colleague on this side of the House the brief time of thirty minutes to discuss something he has been studying for over a year, and the reports regarding that investigation only came in the

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, up to this time, sustains the point of order. The gentleman will please confine himself to the paragraph.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, how many more minutes have

I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remain-

The CHARMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remaining in which to discuss the paragraph.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] to give me a little information regarding the paragraph under discussion, if he can.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from New York is competent to state what information he wants, I can tell him whether

I can give it to him or not.

Mr. SULZER. I notice this post-office is in the gentleman's What I wish to know is this: For what purpose is this additional $50,000 required?

Mr. TAWNEY. To build a post-office that Congress authorized at the last session of Congress.

Mr. SULZER. Exactly; and now I would like to inquire whether the gentleman has appropriated the necessary money in this bill to build all other post-offices in this country which the Congress has authorized?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have—
Mr. SULZER. I think the gentleman is in error. How about

Mr. TAWNEY. If Congress has authorized it. Mr. SULZER. Yes; Congress has authorized the new postoffice for New York City, and as yet not a dollar has been appropriated to begin putting up the building. It is the old story. The gentleman has been good to his own State [laughter], but has been very economical to other States, and has done nothing for New York City. By reason of the gentleman's obstinacy four hours of the time of the House have been wasted because the gentleman would not give a Member of this House thirty minutes on an important question.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order—
Mr. SULZER (continuing). If the gentleman desires to continue, I doubt if he can get this bill through the House for several days to come. I think it is quite remarkable that the gentleman has, right at the very head [laughter] of this bill, an appropriation of $15,000 for the completion of a post-office in Minnesota. But if you will turn over to New York, you will find there is nothing in it for New York City, and that city pays more money into the Post-Office Department every year than any other ten post-offices in the United States. no place in this country where post-office facilities have been so crippled by reason of the neglect of proper legislation as in the great city of New York. It is not fair; it is not just; and I want to call the attention of the House to the matter now, just as I did a few moments ago call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman from Minnesota has wasted four hours of our time here to-day simply because he would not consent to give one of our Members thirty minutes to discuss a most important question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we reach the city of New York I shall offer an amendment and have something more to say about the urgent needs of the post-office there, and I hope that gentlemen on that side of the House who represent the city of New York will stand up in their places and explain why in this appropriation bill there is no provision for building the new post-office in New York City heretofore authorized by Congress, whereas if you take this bill you will find that at the very head of the second page $15,000 is appropriated to build a post-office away out in Minnesota. Now, what is sauce for the goose ought to be sauce for the gander—New York should be treated as fairly as Minnesota—and I am going to see to it if can that the gander gets as much of the sauce as the goose. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For rental of temporary quarters for the accommodation of certain Government officials at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, $3,000; and the provision of the act approved June 30, 1906, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, which provides that all expenses incident to the occupancy of the building in question shall be paid from the sum of $10,000 then appropriated for rent of temporary quarters at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is hereby repealed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order on page 5, beginning at line 5, down to and including line 13. I make the point of order that the whole paragraph is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that this paragraph is new legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman whether he makes the point of order against the appropriation or the repealing clause?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make it as to the whole paragraph, from line 5 down to and including line 13. That certainly comes within the rule.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the committee concedes the point of order, and I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the gentleman offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after line 4, insert: . "For rental of temporary quarters for the accommodation of certain Government officials at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, $3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I renew the point of order as to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, for the same

The CHAIRMAN. "For rental of temporary quarters for the accommodation of certain Government officials at Cedar Rapids, Iowa." Is there a previous authorization?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to state the facts. The city of Cedar Rapids is in the district represented by my colleague [Mr. Cousins]. A bill was passed providing for the complete reconstruction of the Government building, and consequently the officers had to be moved out of the Government building. Last year the bill carried $10,000 to pay for these temporary quarters that are occupied by the Government under a lease of this building furnished by these individuals, and this is simply a continuation of the appropriation for the current fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the statement of the gentleman from Iowa the Chair is clearly of the opinion that this is not subject to the point of order, and therefore overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to expend from the appropriation heretofore made for the United States post-office building at Clarinda, Iowa, not to exceed the sum of $5,000 for the purpose of securing a suitable site for said building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the language on page 6, beginning with line 5, down to and including line 9. It is new legislation. It seeks to divert funds heretofore appropriated for the construction of a public building, or part of the fund, for the purchase of a site for the public building. It is entirely new legislation, and I make the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order as to all that portion of the bill on page 6 be-tween lines 5 and 9, inclusive. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress an appropriation of $10,000 was made for the purpose of beginning the erection of a building at this place. This is simply a limitation upon that appropriation, no more. It is not a change of existing law, further than that it limits the use of that appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what, if any, provision was made in regard to the purchase of a site in the authorization of a year ago?

Mr. HEPBURN. There was no provision made.
Mr. TAWNEY. The proposition is to divert $5,000 of the aggregate amount authorized and make it applicable for the purchase of a site upon which the building is to be erected.

The CHAIRMAN. What was authorized a year ago?

Mr. TAWNEY. The construction of a post-office at this place, at a limit of cost of $40,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Including both building and site?

Mr. TAWNEY. There was nothing mentioned in regard to

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing whatever? Mr. TAWNEY. I understand from the gentleman from Iowa that the proposition was that the site was to be donated by the people in the city of Clarinda. That is not now possible, and this proposition involves the diversion of $5,000 of the amount originally appropriated for the purchase of the site upon which to erect the building that has been authorized. It does not involve any increase in the appropriation at all. No site was included heretofore.

The Chair would like to ask the gentle-The CHAIRMAN. man from Iowa whether or not the Secretary of the Treasury is directed by this section to do something that he can not now do under existing law and under the present authorization?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does or does not the gentleman from Iowa regard that as a change of existing law?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think that it is a change of existing law and would be subject to this rule but for the fact that there has been an appropriation of money. Now, I understand that a direction as to the particular use of that appropriation is simply a limitation upon it and has not been under the ruling of the Chair heretofore regarded as obnoxious to this rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that in a negative direction this would undoubtedly be a limitation on the appropriation, but here seems to the Chair to be something of an affirmative direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to do something that he can not now do under existing law. However, the Chair thinks it is a very close question, having examined it in another matter on this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, just a word on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Florida, if the gentleman from Iowa has concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I just simply desire to say this: From the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota and of the gentleman from Iowa it appears that a previous Congress appropriated a sufficient amount of money for the construction appropriated a sufficient amount of money for the construction of a public building. The law making that appropriation is in force to-day. Now it is sought by this legislation to divert a part of that fund, created under this former act, from the purpose for which it was intended. Therefore it unquestionably becomes a change of existing law. As the Chair very properly remarked, the Secretary of the Treasury has not the power under the existing law to divert this sum for the purchase of a site, and it is essential that another act be passed so changing the law as to give him the power, and unquestionably it is a the law as to give him the power, and unquestionably it is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard further?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Or the chairman of the committee?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not.
The CHAIRMAN. The authorization of a year ago contains the following language, in section 7:

Provided, That in each of the cities mentioned in this section a suitable site, satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, is sold to the United States at a cost not to exceed the sum of $1.

And then follows a list of the post-offices to be constructed under those circumstances, the sites being practically donated by the city. The United States post-office at Clarinda, Iowa, was one of the post-offices to be constructed on a site to be donated by the city of Clarinda, or to be obtained at the price of $1.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me just a moment, out of deference to my friend, I will withdraw the point of order in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Howell having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 24925. An act making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other pur-

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 22338. An act to bridge Bayou Bartholomew in Louisiana.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 5290) providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. STONE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House concurrent resolution of the following

House concurrent resolution 56.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate are hereby authorized and directed to permit Jacob Ruppert, Jr., to affix his name as one of the managers of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill S. 4403, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Houston, Tex., post-office and court-house: For continuation of building under present limit, $100,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the construction and completion of the building at a total cost not to exceed $200,000, including the sums herein and heretofore appropriated, but exclusive of the cost of site.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to that paragraph. It is a misprint. The word "including." in line 21, should read "in addition to."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, line 21, strike out the word "including" and insert the words "in addition to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mason City, Iowa, post-office: For completion of building under present limit, $50,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment

The Clerk read as follows:

Mason City, Iowa, post-office: For additional land, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

New Orleans, La., post-office and court-house: For continuation of building under present limit, $250,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the construction and completion of the building, at a total cost not to exceed $850,000, exclusive of the sums herein and heretofore appropriated, but exclusive of the cost of site.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to get an explanation. I notice a number of items of this kind where the bill authorizes the letting of contracts. Why is not this covered in the public-building bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that there are just four cases.

Mr. MANN. This is the fourth case and there is another one. There are cases at Richmond, New Orleans, Houston, Atlanta, and Johnson City. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. TAWNEY. This is an authorization carried in the last public-building bill, but the limit of cost fixed by that bill in these cases was not specifically stated in all of the four cases. Perhaps the purpose was to make it appear that the public-building bill carried a less amount than appeared on the surface.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask if this meets with the approval of the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who announced a few days ago that he was not going to let the Committee on Appropriations usurp the functions of his committee.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that this paragraph is clearly in order, because it is authorized in the last public-building bill.

Mr. MANN. It is not in order as far as that is concerned.

If it is in order, it has no place in the bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes; it has a place in the bill for this reason; because this is the only bill which makes appropriation, while the bill which the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds prepares only authorizes expenditures. In that bill we carried a total amount of $1,300,000 for New Orleans, and the exact amount was appropriated in the last sundry civil bill; and this is an additional amount, so that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department can go ahead and contract for the completion of the building.

Mr. MANN. The public-building bill is the bill that carries the authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into contracts. This bill carries the appropriation, item it carries both the appropriation and the authority to enter into the contract. So I say that it is usurping the functions of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which the gentleman announced to us he would not permit the committee to do.

BARTHOLDT. The authorization was carried in the Mr. last bill.

Mr. MANN. What is the object of putting it into this bill and leaving it out of the other item?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It was necessary to repeat the phraseology of the bill providing for the public building passed at the

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to tell the committee that in this specific item it is necessary to repeat the phrase-ology of the public-building bill and is not necessary to repeat it on each of the other items identically alike as far as public buildings are concerned?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; but if the gentleman will investigate, he will find that they are not alike, for the reason that in all the other items the total amount, the total limited cost, was fixed in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the lucid and clear explanation of the gentleman from Missouri, which nobody understands, I withdraw the point of order. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

New York, N. Y., assay office: For continuation of the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of building under present limit, $150,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to come in immediately after that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

New York, N. Y., post-office: For continuing building of new post-office on site at East Thirty-fourth street, in the city of New York, $1,000,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, to that I make the point of order that the law does not authorize it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a The point of order made by the gentleman from few moments. Minnesota may be correct, but I wish to call his attention to the fact that almost every one of the appropriations for these new post-office buildings, which I have not objected to, were also subject to a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from New York will permit

Mr. SULZER. One moment. If the gentleman from Minnesota is going to insist on his point of order against the New York City post-office, the great distributing mail center of this country, the most important post-office in this country, then I shall be compelled to raise a point of order on every other single item in this bill. Now, Mr. Chairman—Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly. Mr. TAWNEY. What law is there that authorizes the construction of the post-office building in the city of New York?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the act, which after years of struggle in the House we finally got through, to build the new post-office in the city of New York within the depot at the terminus of the Pennsylvania Railroad. We paid the Pennsylvania Railroad $3,000,000 for the right in perpetuity to build this post-office within their new railroad depot, which is going to be the greatest depot in the world—
Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit another interrup-

That authority was for the purchase of the site.

Mr. SULZER. The Government bought the site.
Mr. TAWNEY. I am asking the gentleman what legislative authority there exists to-day for the construction of the build-

Mr. SULZER. Absolutely none. That is the reason I am offering this amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that is the reason I make the point of

Mr. SULZER. I want to say that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is now constructing this depot, and it is incumbent upon the Government to construct within the depot this new post-office

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly. Mr. TAWNEY. Did the gentleman from New York call upon the committee or any member of the Committee on Appropria-

Mr. SULZER. I did not.

Mr. TAWNEY. And request that this or any other item in respect to the construction of the post-office in New York should be carried in this bill? Mr. SULZER. I did not, because I knew it was useless, but I did think that certain Republican Members from the city of New York, especially a distinguished Republican [Mr. Lit-TAUER | on the committee from the State of New York, after all that has been printed in the newspapers concerning this new post-office, and after all the petitions which were poured into this House regarding the matter, would surely have seen to it that the money was appropriated for this new post-office; but be that as it may

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly,
Mr. TAWNEY. In justice to his colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman ought also to state that the Committee on Appropriations is not a legislative committee.

Mr. SULZER. That is my point. Then why are we legislating in this bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. And had the gentleman's colleague on the committee secured the money for the construction of this building, it would have been in violation of law and would have gone out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been made—
Mr. SULZER. This is a very important matter—not to me personally, because I get my mail down town [laughter], but I am talking now for the Representatives uptown and their constituents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from New York the parliamentary status. The point of order has been made.

Mr. SULZER. So I understand. The CHAIRMAN. And therefore it is incumbent on the Chair to rule

Mr. SULZER. I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order for a minute

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman consent to reserve his point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has made the point of order.

But he can reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair is compelled to rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. But the gentleman can reserve his point of

Mr. TAWNEY. How much time does the gentleman want? Mr. SULZER. Oh, say two minutes. Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order in order that the gentleman may speak for two minutes on the construction of the post-office in New York not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. It is somewhat irregular, but the gentleman is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. Chairman, just a word in answer to what Mr. SULZER. the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has said about an appropriation not authorized by law. No doubt he is aware of one hundred or more items in this bill which are subject to points of order and are not authorized by law.

Mr. TAWNEY. He is not aware of that, and it is not the fact.

Mr. SULZER. Now, I have only got two minutes. The gentleman gave me only two minutes, and I hope he will not deprive me of any of that time. I am talking here for the Government. The Government is interested in this matter. If the Pennsylvania Railroad Company goes on and builds the new depot and the Government does not build the new post-office within it while this other work is going on, it may cost the Government three and maybe five times more money hereafter to do it than it would cost if we would appropriate it now. It was suggested on the floor of this House, and it was understood by Congress and the Secretary of the Treasury, that just as soon as the Pennsylvania Railroad began to construct its depot in the city of New York the Government would immediately begin the construction of the new post-office within that depot.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Congress is not keeping faith with the city of New York; it is not keeping faith with the Secretary of the Treasury; it is breaking faith under the act of this Congress with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Now, every Member from the city of New York is aware of the fact that there is nothing so important to the citizens of New York City and the people of this country as the quick distribution of the mails. Nearly all foreign mails come to New York City and are distributed from there. More than a quarter of all the mails of the United States in one way or the other come to New York and are distributed from there to the ends of the earth, and that can not be done expeditiously without proper facilities, and the post-office in New York City has not now the facilities to do it. That is all there is to it. The Republicans must take the responsibility for this delay, for this breach of faith, for this deplorable condition of postal affairs and facilities in the city of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Niagara Falls, N. Y., post-office: For completion of building under present limit, $36,250.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a very brief statement. My colleague from New York City [Mr. Sulzer] very correctly says that the completion of this new post-office is of great importance to those of us who live uptown in New York City. We paid $1,660,000, not $3,000,000, to the Pennsylvania Railroad for the site. If we have an appropriation this year of $1,000,000, we could not use it, and I want to say to my friend from New York-

Mr. SULZER. My friend is mistaken about the price.

Mr. BENNET of New York. When we come here to Congress for an appropriation for that purpose we want a great deal more than a million dollars.

Mr. SULZER. What I am asking for now would be a good starter.

Mr. BENNET of New York. All we could use this year is $100,000 for the supports on top of the work which the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is doing-

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. In just a moment. And before this Congress adjourns I think we will find a way to get that $100,000, which is all the Treasury Department informs us we can use this year.

Mr. SULZER. I just want to ask my colleague, the gentle-man from New York, if he is opposed to an appropriation now to begin the building of this new post-office?

Mr. BENNET of New York. When it is clearly insufficient; yes. I want $5,000,000, not $1,000,000.

Mr. SULZER. Does not my colleague think that one million now is enough with which to start? I understood him to say only $100,000 can be spent this year, and that he wants $5,000,000. My colleague is inconsistent.

Mr. BENNET of New York. We would like to get that and the five million afterwards.

Mr. SULZER. Does the gentleman think he can get five million from this Congress?

Mr. BENNET of New York. We do not want it.
Mr. SULZER. Then I understand my friend does not want anything for the new post-office from this Congress?
Mr. BENNET of New York. We want $100,000.
Mr. SULZER. What assurance can the gentleman give that

New York City will get even that $100,000 for the new post-

Mr. BENNET of New York. You watch us. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. You need watching. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

North Adams, Mass., post-office: For site and for continuation of building under present limit, $50,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that paragraph in regard to North Adams.

What is the point of order? The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. SULZER. That it is new legislation.
Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, the public-building bill passed at the last session of Congress contained an authorization | for all of the new buildings authorized in that act, and instead of $115,000 for a site and building at North Adams, Mass. The sundry civil bill passed during the same session appropriated $40,000 under that authorization. The pending item appropriates $50,000 more under the authorization contained in the public-building bill to which I have referred, and is clearly within the law.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman if the site has been purchased?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The Government has selected the site.

Mr. SULZER. But the site has not been purchased? Mr. LAWRENCE. The title has not been passed.

Mr. SULZER. That is the point I desire to make. Money is appropriated for a building long before a site for it has been

How intensely absurd it all is when we consider New York City has a site and can not get the money for the building.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will say to the gentleman that the site has been selected, and all that remains to be done is to perfect the title. As soon as that is done the Government will go on with the construction of the building. An additional appropriation is therefore necessary. It is clearly within the existing law. I do not care to argue it further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Paris, Ill., post-office: For site, and for continuation of building der present limit, $30,000.

Mr. SULZER. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if this appropriation was authorized in the public-building bill?

authorized in the public to Mr. TAWNEY. What building is it?
Mr. TAWNEY. What building is it?
Mr. SULZER. The Clerk will inform the gentleman.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] against lines 20 and 21 on page 20, the post-office at Paris, Ill.
Mr. TAWNEY. That building was authorized by the last

I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows Mr. SULZER. whether the site has been selected.

Mr. TAWNEY. I can tell the gentleman.
Mr. JAMES. What is the item that the point of order is made to—Paris, Ky.? [Laughter.]
The CHAIRMAN. Paris, Ill.

Mr. TAWNEY. The site had not been purchased at the time we had the hearings, but the Supervising Architect informed the committee that the negotiations were almost completed and will be before the expiration of this session of Congress.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman-Mr. TAWNEY. And the amou And the amount estimated is the amount that can be expended during the fiscal year 1908 in the construction of the building.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman has just said bears out most conclusively all I have said in criticism of this kind of legislation. We are appropriating money here in every paragraph for new post-offices in cities, towns, and villages all over the country where the site has not even been selected, and in New York City, where the site was selected several years ago, we do not appropriate a dollar for the new postoffice building.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SULZER. That is the commentary I desire to make upon this matter, and I intend to go on making the same commentary, notwithstanding the assurance of my colleague from New York [Mr. Benner] that he is sure he is going to get a wee little bit of a hundred thousand dollars for a new post-office in the great city of New York. I withdraw the point of order. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Portland, Me., couft-house: For continuation of building under present limit, $125,000; and the appropriation of $25,000 for the post-office at Portland, Me., made in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1907, is hereby made available for the court-house in said

Mr. SULZER. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. SULZER. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Mr. SULZER. It is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state the facts to the Chair. The last public-building bill authorized the construction of a court-house at Portland, Me., fixing the limit of cost, and the Department sent the estimate up here at the closing hours of the session of using the language of the act—that is, the word "court-house"—they used the word "post-office." The appropriation, therefore, is unavailable for the construction of the courthouse for the reason that the money was appropriated for a post-office. It is simply to change—

Mr. MANN. Is it the same authorization?

Mr. TAWNEY. Identically the same authorization.

Mr. MANN. The same building?

Mr. MANN. The same building:
Mr. TAWNEY. And it is the same building.
Mr. SULZER. I would like to say that under the rules the paragraph is clearly subject to a point of order, as it changes existing law, which can not be done under the rule on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] whether or not the post-office in question was authorized by the act of a year ago?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was not. The authorization is for a court-house.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the court-house authorized?

Mr. TAWNEY. The court-house is authorized.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that the authorization was for the court-house.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask this question, Whether or not this is a reappropriation of an unexpended balance of a sum that was appropriated for a lawful object?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman will permit me, I can state the facts. The public-building act made an appropriation for a court-house, but in making the appropriations in the sundry civil bill the building was designated as a post-office instead as a court-house, and this is simply to correct the error.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. SULZER. I trust the Chair is not in doubt about the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

Provo. Utah, post-office: For site and for completion of building under event limit, $45,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move to strike out

I move to strike out the last word for the Mr. SULZER. purpose of making an inquiry. I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if this post-office has been authorized by law?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It has been.

Mr. SULZER. Authorized?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rawlins, Wyo., post-office: For site and for continuation of building under present limit, $40,000.

Mr. SULZER. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry. I would like to know from the gentleman from Minnesota if there is any law authorizing this appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word, and asks for information from the gentleman from Minnesota about line 14, page 22

Mr. TAWNEY. That is authorized by existing law.
Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman, then, if this site has been selected?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will turn to page 52 of the hearings he will find what the Supervising Architect said in regard to it:

The site has been selected, and in order that building operations may be prosecuted with dispatch it is desired that an appropriation in the limit be made of $40,000 instead of $20,000 asked for in the estimates.

Mr. SULZER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.
Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question that applies to the words that are here used and takes in nearly all of these items that we are considering for purchase of sites and continuation of buildings. I understand the sites have been purchased prior to this time, and why is it that the committee continues to use that language?

Mr. TAWNEY. Because it is the authorization in the public building act.

Mr. NORRIS. As a matter of fact, you can not use that language here for the particular appropriation in this bill for the purchase of the site.

Mr. TAWNEY. The purchase of the site has already been made. The site has been purchased, and this is not an authorization for the purchase of the site.

Mr. NORRIS. That states that. Mr. TAWNEY. Site and building. Mr. NORRIS. The site has been purchased under a prior appropriation, and as a matter of fact if we undertook to appropriate any more money for site it would be subject to the point of order, as I take it, because it has already been purchased.

Mr. PAYNE. They could purchase an addition to the site.
Mr. NORRIS. Not if they have used the appropriation.
Mr. PAYNE. If the law authorizes the use of it for the purchase of site and to complete the building they are following the language of the original law

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a title that is carried on the Treasury books in connection with every one of these public buildings: "For site and construction of buildings."

Mr. NORRIS. Even if that is true, it is not the intention to purchase any more site is it? Then if that is so, why should we appropriate money for the purpose of continuing purchases?

Mr. TAWNEY. We are not. The Clerk read as follows:

Rochester, N. Y., court-house and post-office: For completion of extension of building under present limit, $70,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry. I should like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota who fixes the plans of these various buildings that we are putting up all over the United States?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Supervising Architect, and there are a great many of them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are under the practical control of the Supervising Architect; I understand that. know him very well, and I think very well of him; but my information has been-I can not just exactly tell where I it, possibly from the newspapers—that in addition to having this splendid corps of architects in the Department, paid full salaries, kept in office all the time, that we employ outside architects at a large expense to the Government. Now, I myself investigated for the purpose of finding out whether or not that was true to any extent, and the result of that investiga-tion, as well as I recollect, is that he did not have enough architects down there to do this immense work, and they did have a good deal of it done by outsiders at a large expense. Does the gentleman know about that; and if so, how much do we pay for architects outside of the regular architects we have?

There are no architects planning or con-TAWNEY. structing any public building unless express authority for such employment is given; and it is rarely given-only in such cases as the construction of the post-office in Chicago, which is a very large building; otherwise the work is done by the Supervising Architect and the force of draftsmen and architects he has in the Department.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, was there not another architect used for the new improvements at Annapolis?

Well, that is true; but they are not being Mr. TAWNEY. constructed by the Treasury Department; and I do not suppose that the Navy Department has a sufficient organization of that kind to enable them to prepare plans for buildings of that magnitude.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, now, are not the men grad-uated at Annapolis sufficiently learned in the art of construction to put up such a building as that without going to outside architects?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a subject on which I am not able to answer the gentleman. I have never gone into the question, and I do not know whether these men are learned in this profession.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My information is that they are. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is no course in architecture at Annapolis.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman if he knows whether there is a course of architecture at Annapolis?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, they know how to construct a ship.

Mr. TAWNEY. That remains to be seen.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They have done it. A young man of the Navy from my district, Mr. John Rhum, helped to build the Oregon, and I think men who can construct a man-ofwar like the Oregon can certainly construct a better building than we have at Annapolis.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand the practice to be for the Supervising Architect to invite the submission of plans by local architects in the various parts of the country, because there is too much work for his office to do. I know that is the case in the district which I have the honor to represent, and these architects are paid such fees or compensation as the Supervising Architect designates. It is the common practice, because it is necessary. If the force in the office undertook to provide plans and to supervise the construction of all these buildings, it would require years and years to finish them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I agree with the gentleman on that. I was trying to get at the cost of these architects who are employed on the outside.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know what the cost is, but I know what the practice is. In Hammond, Ind., a plan sub-mitted by a local architect was adopted and approved, and he has superintended the construction of the building, which cost

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My friend is a very versatile man. Can he tell us whether or not—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say for the information of the gentleman that the usual compensation allowed architects is 5 per cent on the cost of the work.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; I am sadly aware of that fact, because I know some of the fees we have been paying in these large undertakings—Annapolis being one and the renova-tion of the White House another. Does the gentleman know whether or not they teach young men sufficiently in architecture at Annapolis and West Point to enable them to be competent for such work?

Mr. MADDEN: They do not teach them architecture at all.

They teach them engineering.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will tell you why I have asked I was told by a member of the Navy, a very you that question. accomplished gentleman, down at the hotel, when the question of paying these large fees to outside architects was up, I think, for the building of some structure at Annapolis or West Point, in the navy-yard at San Francisco, or one of our navy-yards—this gentleman said: "Mr. Gaines, our men are educated to do better work for the Government in erecting this building than any architect that ever lived. It is our business; we are taught that, and we know how to do it; but they will go along and put up these houses, and they will not do it as well or as cheaply as the very men the Government educates and maintains to do that business.'

Mr. MADDEN. The duty of an engineer is to figure out the strength of a bridge or other structure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They do not stop at building bridges. Almost anybody can build a bridge. I have built them myself before I came to Congress and may have to do so again.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no doubt the gentleman built the bridge over which he came to Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did, and I will tell you now that it was a good one, and there was no trust-made material went into it, and by the Eternal there never will be. made several journeys across it, and I dare say it will hold up the man who succeeds me.

Now, I thank the House. I was trying to get a little information.

Mr. MADDEN. Did you make your bridge out of Tennessee lumber?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; and some hickory.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman tell us where the hickory came from? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of temporary quarters at Rochester, N. Y., including necessary moving expenses, $8,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against lines 15 to 17, inclusive, on page 23, the paragraph just read by the Clerk, that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order on the paragraph from lines 15 to 17, on page 23. The Chair would like to be informed in regard to that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is for making repairs to the post-office or public building in the city of Rochester, and the rent of temporary quarters is necessary on account of the work being done in the extension or repairs to the present building and is authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the point. Does the gentleman from Minnesota say that it is authorized by law?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to ask the gentleman if he means to say that the item "necessary moving expenses" is authorized by law?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it is authorized by the general law. If it were not for the fact that this is a large amount to be expended in the repair of this building, much of it being made necessary by the extension which has been practically completed, this item would have been carried under the general appropriation, and it would be entirely competent for the Department, under the existing law, to take so much of the appropriation as was necessary to defray the expenses of moving and also rent of quarters.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman means that it is impliedly authorized; he does not mean to say it is expressly au-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether or not the moving mentioned in the item is authorized?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. If the moving is authorized, in the opinion of the Chair, the necessity of it is authorized.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know myself, Mr. Chairman, what the law is.

Mr. TAWNEY. The reconstruction of the building, the extension of the building, was specifically authorized. Now, in consequence of making this extension, certain repairs of the old part of the building are necessary, which repairs could be paid for out of the general appropriation for repair and maintenance of public buildings.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman has the authorization, will he be kind enough to read the language?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not the statute by me authorizing the extension of this building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have never seen the law and if the gentleman has it I wish he would read the exact language to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether or not the temporary quarters mentioned in line 15 was authorized by law?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is; and I will say to the Chair

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman know what year? Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know; but when the Supervising Architect was before the committee he was asked if the work could be done out of the general appropriation which is carried in this bill for repairs of all post-offices or public buildings, and he said it could. They had authority to expend the money and it was immaterial whether it was given in a lump sum or in the general appropriation, or segregated and appropriated for separately. So the committee, to avoid increasing the aggregate amount carried in the general appropriation, made specific appropriation for the repair of this building and the moving and rent of temporary quarters

I have here the appropriation for rent, light, and fuel for the first, second, and third class post-offices, $3,000,000. That is the appropriation out of which these repairs could be made if we had included that amount in the aggregate of the general appropriation; but to avoid increasing that aggregate so that the next fiscal year we would not be accused of cutting down the ordinary appropriation for repairs of buildings, we made, as in the last session of Congress, a specific appropriation for this particular item which is authorized under the general law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the point of order should be overruled, and the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

For special repairs to the post-office at Rochester, N. Y., made necessary because of and incident to the extension of said building authorized in an act approved June 30, 1906, $40,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language contained on page 23, lines 18 to 21, inclusive.

What is the gentleman's point of order? The CHAIRMAN. Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is a change in existing law.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, that point has been ruled over and over again. This is for repairs of an existing building, a continuation of Government work in progress. You will find on page 348 of the Manual half a dozen precedents. It was held that the repair of a bridge built at Government expense was a continuation of a public work. It was held in the Fifty-sixth Congress that the construction of a bridge on a road in the District of Columbia was a continuation of a public work. It was held again, in the Fifty-eighth Congress, that an appropriation for the rent and repairs of a building used for the public service was a continuation of a public work. In the Fiftysixth Congress an appropriation for the repairing of a sawmill was held to be in continuation of a public work. paragraph is clearly within the exception to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is well satisfied on the point, and overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rockford, Ill., post-office: For additional land and for the completion of the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of building under present limit, $15,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?
Mr. SULZER. New legislation—not authorized by law.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the gentleman from Minnesota whether or not there is an authorization for that?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is authorized by law.
Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman where the law is authorizing the purchase of additional land?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman will find it back there in the Congressional law library. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. Indeed, but I do not find anything in the book of hearings in regard to it. As far as I can ascertain there was never any law passed authorizing the purchase of additional land. The site has been purchased, and this is new legislation because it calls for the purchase of additional land. That might go on ad infinitum until they could take up 20 or 30 acres

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from New York to page 775 of the statutes of last year, section 3, "that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise such additional land as he may deem necessary for the enlargement of the present site, and to enter into contracts for enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the following-named buildings within the respective limits of cost hereby fixed," and that the second item mentioned under that general authorization is the United States post-office at Rockford, Ill., $25,000. It is clearly within the language of the statute and the Chair overrules the point of Mr. SULZER. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

St. Louis, Mo., post-office: For additional land and for continuation of building under present limit, $250,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the Chair if under the act which was just read to the gentleman from New York by the Chairman the city of St. Louis

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can tell by examination.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not care to raise the point of order if it is included.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that it is authorized by law. The limit of cost is $110,000. Five hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars has already been appropriated, and this is $250,000 which is estimated can be expended in the next fiscal year on the building under the previous authorization.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am asking the chairman if there is any authorization for the purchase of more land for St. Louis, Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, Mr. Chairman; there is. The purchase of additional land has been authorized in the last publicbuilding act.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the chairman of the Public Building Committee makes that statement, I will not press the point

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it would be good authority, inasmuch as the chairman of that committee lives in the city of St. Louis, and the Chair presumes looked after it.

[Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say on this point of order that it is clearly the duty of the gentleman raising the point of order to show that there is no existing law. It is not the business of the chairman to inform gentlemen who make points of order as to what the law is. It simply is delaying the action of the committee and, in view of what the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sulzer] said a half hour ago, it looks a good deal like dilatory proceedings. I insist that the Chairman ought to overrule the points of order so long as the gentlemen fail to show that there is no authorization in the law for it. The presumption is in favor of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

What is before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York. [Laugh-

Mr. PAYNE. My colleague is.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, everybody can see the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] when he arises. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sharon, Pa., post-office: For site and continuation of building under present limit, $30,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Minne-sota [Mr. Tawney] if this site for Sharon, Pa., has been pur-

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know.
Mr. SULZER. Well, the gentleman ought to know as chairman of the committee. Before he appropriates money for a building he ought to at least secure the site.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not necessary for me to know. The purchase of the site was authorized and the construction of the building was authorized,

Mr. SULZER. And the gentleman is appropriating money for a building before he knows the site has been purchased. No wonder the gentleman lectured the House this morning about a two-billion dollar Congress—a deficit of one hundred million of dollars-appropriating money in that way. [Laughter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Willimantic, Conn., post-office: For site and for completion of building under present limit, $30,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if this site has been secured. I call the gentleman's attention to Willimantic post-office, Conn., line 12,

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the name of the place?
Mr. SULZER. Has the site been purchased?
Mr. TAWNEY. Where?
Mr. SULZER. Willimantic, Conn.
Mr. TAWNEY. For the information only of the gentleman from New York I will read:

An agent has inspected the site, and it is probable that it can be secured in the near future. In order that work on the building may not be then delayed it will be necessary that the balance up to the limit be appropriated, $30,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few words. I have no disposition to delay the progress of this bill by captiously discussing these matters. My purpose is to enlighten the country. [Laughter.] I want it understood by the people, and hence I call the attention of the House to the fact that the Appropriations Committee find fault with their own work and call this a "two billion-dollar Congress," yet in this very bill, reported unanimously from the Appropriations Committee, they appropriate millions and millions of dollars for public buildings where the site has not even been purchased.

Now, how ridiculous that is, and what a commentary it is upon what I was speaking about a few moments ago with regard to the great city of New York, where the Government has purchased a site, where the railroad company is building the depot, and the post-office is to be in the center of that depot, and the Committee on Appropriations allows the railroad to go on and put up its building and does not build within it, as provided by law, its own post-office, so that next year it will cost twice as much as it will cost this year. I bring these facts to the attention of the country-

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit?
Mr. SULZER. In one moment, if the gentleman pleases.
So that when the newspapers ring the changes on this two-billiondollar Congress the day after we adjourn the Republicans will have no excuse to offer to the people, because the taxpayers will stand up and say the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] called your attention to this extravagance and you would not listen to him and heed.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Treasury building at Washington, D. C.: For repairs to Treasury, Butler, and Winder buildings, including personal services of skilled mechanics, $18,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point against the language, page 30, beginning lines 14 to 17, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is new legislation and not authorized by law. I make this point, Mr. Chairman, and call your attention particularly to it. This paragraph uses this language: "For Treasury building at Washington, D. C.; for repairs to Treasury, Butler, and Winder buildings—" and now repairs to Treasury, Butter, and Winder buildings—" and now this is the particular language—"including personal services of skilled mechanics, $18,000." I do not think that is provided for by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAWRENCE). The Chair will state the rulings are practically uniform that repairs to public buildings are authorized by existing law and services of skilled mechanics are of course simply incidental thereto. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repair of the east front of the Treasury building, including substitution of granite for the soft stone used in said east front of the building, the unexpended balance of $155,147.42 of the appropriation made for "Treasury building, Washington, D. C., ventilation," is hereby authorized to be expended, together with the further sum of $204,852.58, which is hereby appropriated.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, page 30, line 18, down to and including line 2 on page 31, as being not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This provision undertakes to substitute granite for soft stone used in the east front of the Treasury building. I take it that is not provided for by a provision of law; if so, there is no necessity of reenacting it here. Then, again, Mr. Chairman, the language following that undertakes to divert the unexpended balance of money appropriated for a particular purpose from that purpose to some other purpose. That is new law for which there is no provision, and I think clearly the point of order lies.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.
The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of suitable fireproof steel files for the safe-keeping of official bonds of officers of the Treasury and other Executive Departments for which the Secretary of the Treasury is responsible as custodian, $3,500.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the language on page 31, beginning with line 3 and down to and including line 7, as being new legislation and not authorized by existing law. I do not care to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentlemen from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] on that point.

Mr. TAWNEY. These are files that are to take the place of the wooden files that are now in the Treasurer's office. It is a refurnishing. At the present time all the bonds in the office of the appointment division of the Treasury Department are filed in wooden cases, and it is to replace these for the purpose of giving greater security and greater protection, and also increasing the room for filing purposes.

On that statement the Chair overrules the The CHAIRMAN.

point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and preservation of public buildings: Repairs, and preservation of custom-houses, court-houses, and post-offices, and quarantine stations, buildings and wharf at Sitka, Alaska, and the other public buildings and the grounds thereof, and of sites acquired for public buildings, under the control of the Treasury Department, and including not exceeding $50,000 for marine hospitals, $475,000 may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, in the employment, outside of the District of Columbia, of superintendents and others, including mechanical labor force, at a rate of compensation not exceeding for any one person $6 per day.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, Sitka was formerly the capital of the district of Alaska. Some time ago, however, Congress passed a law by which the capital of the district of Alaska could be removed at any time to Juneau, Alaska; and when a new governor was appointed recently by the President he moved the capital, in accordance with that provision of law, from Sitka to Juneau, and at the present time all the higher officials of the Government in Alaska are located at Juneau and not at Sitka, and Juneau is the capital of Alaska. I was at Sitka two years ago and looked over these buildings very carefully. They are a lot of old ramshackle buildings that no real-estate man, or no other purchaser, would pay $500 for; and when the governor moved all the documents and papers from Sitka to Juneau he turned these old buildings over to the War Department to use for whatever purposes desired. And hence it is a waste of money now to repair or remodel or renovate those old buildings at Sitka, which have been there ever since the Government acquired title to the district of Alaska from Russia, away back in 1867. If this appropriation goes through, it is just so much money thrown away. These buildings, as I say, are not occupied to-day. The capital is no longer in Sitka, the buildings have been turned over to the War Department, and every dollar that this provision carries to repair them is just so much money wasted. The money should be spent for new Government buildings at Juneau. Sitka is dead. I trust that this paragraph will be stricken out, and I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Sul-

ZER] withdraws his pro forma amendment and moves that the paragraph be stricken out. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, at this point I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 31, after line 25, insert:

"To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by condemnation or otherwise, additional land adjoining the present site occupied by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and for the erection, completion, including heating and ventilating, of an addition to, or extension of, the buildings of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which shall conform architecturally in character and quality to the material used in the existing buildings of the said Bureau, $150,000."

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I desire to say that this contemplates an enlargement of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in the District of Columbia. The Bureau is very much crowded, and they are very much in need of room, as every Member of this House knows who has recently visited that building.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TAWNEY. In just one minute. It is a public work, and think it is clearly in order.

Mr. SULZER. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that the Bureau of Printing and Engraving is very much cramped. think that was the word I used when talking about the postal facilities in the city of New York. It may be as the gentleman says, but I again recur to the New York City post-office and desire to inform the gentleman—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

Mr. SULZER. That the New York City post-office is also very badly cramped.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling. Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say on the point of order that this is clearly new legislation and not authorized by law, and the gentleman should bring in the legislation in the proper way

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAWRENCE). The Chair finds that the proposed amendment is for the purchase of land adjoining the site occupied by the present building, and for the extension of the present building. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as lonows:

That in all cases, during the fiscal years 1907 and 1908, where any building or buildings not reserved by the vender are on land heretofore acquired, or which may hereafter be acquired, for Federal building sites or for the enlargement of Federal building sites, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to rent such building or buildings until their removal becomes necessary and to make such repairs thereto as may be necessary to keep the buildings in tenantable condition, payment to be made from the proceeds derived from the rentals; the net proceeds to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and a report thereof to be submitted to Congress annually.

Mr. SHEBLEY, I desire to offer a new paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. I desire to offer a new paragraph. Mr. CLARK of Florida. I desire to make the point of order against the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Against the paragraph just read—line 1 down to 13, inclusive, on page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the Chair will ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he intended his amendment as a substitute for this paragraph, or does he wish to offer the amendment to be inserted at the end of page 31?

Mr. SHERLEY. I desire to insert that after the word "annually," in line 13 on page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will then wait until the ruling upon the point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Florida. Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say simply, in reference to the point of order, that if the Chair will observe, in line 6, "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized." Now, they are authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to do something that it is certain he is not authorized to do without this: therefore this is new legislation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order, if the gentleman insists upon it. But I will state the facts, however; that it is for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Treasury to rent buildings that the Government now owns in the District of Columbia and apply a part of the proceeds of the rent to the repair of those buildings. That is all this is for. The Government is now paying $7,000 for rent of these buildings. It has no authority to make any repair—necessary repairs that are absolutely necessary to the occupation of the buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is legislation upon an appropriation bill, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I offer an amendment to come in after line 13 on page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

Insert after line 13, page 32, the following:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is directed in designating any stone to be used in the public buildings for which appropriations are carried in this act to specify stone quarried in the State in which such building is to be erected, if stone suitable for such purposes be obtainable unless it be more expensive than stone of equal quality obtainable elsewhere."

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order upon that. Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the committee that the effect of this amendment, if adopted, will simply be to have stone—native stone—used in the various public buildings provided in this act to be erected in the different States, provided such stone be suitable for that purpose, and be not more expensive than stone of equal quality to be had elsewhere, a proposition against which there can be no valid objection. I believe in patronizing the home market whenever the thing obtainable in that market is as good as any other obtainable elsewhere and at as reasonable a price. That is all that this does. It simply indicates the will of the House that in the selection of building stone stone quarried in the State, native to the State, shall be used for this purpose if it be obtainable at a fair price. I trust that no gentleman will insist upon the I recognize the amendment is subject to the point of order. point of order, but I believe that it is legislation that a majority of this House favors.

Mr. TAWNEY. I insist upon the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of 290 keepers of life-saving and lifeboat stations and of houses of refuge, $249,600.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment the poorest paid employees of the Government are the men in the life-I take a deep interest in their welfare, and in the future, as in the past, will do all I can to aid them. brave men perform the most arduous duties and heroic acts of any employees of the United States. I am in favor of economy along legitimate lines, but I am opposed to grinding down the poor, and hence I favor paying the life-savers along our coasts a little more money than they have been receiving. The small sum of $65 a month which they receive as a stipend is scarcely enough to keep body and soul together. And now that there is a spirit abroad in favor of increasing salaries it seems to me that the Congress ought to increase the pay of the brave, overworked, and self-sacrificing life-savers of the country.

Any man who has ever witnessed the bravery, the hardihood, the dangerous and heroic performances of the life-savers along the Atlantic coast, when the storm roars and the waves beat high, will tell you that whenever there is a storm and a ship is on the rocks or strikes the bar, these men, taking their lives in their hands, go out in their lifeboats to save the ship and the human lives aboard; and when they go out in the breakers they do not know that they will ever return alive.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentleman from Minnesota, who has been extremely liberal in appropriations for almost every conceivable purpose, will do something to increase the salaries of the men employed in the life-saving stations along the coasts of the United States. It seems to me it would be only just and fair to give them an increase of at least 25 per They are entitled to more pay; they deserve it. are getting the same pay now that they got when the original act was passed over twenty years ago, while the price of the necessaries of life during that time has increased over 35 per cent. So while they are getting the same pay they got twenty years ago, they are paying for everything they have to buy for themselves and families over 35 per cent more than they did then. Hence their pay is now 35 per cent less than it was twenty years ago. What an anomaly! What a spectacle!

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of crews of surfmen employed at the life-saving and lifeboat stations, including the old Chicago station, and at the building to be erected on the grounds of the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition, near the waters of Hampton Roads, in the State of Virginia, under authority of section 10 of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, for an exhibit of the United States Life-Saving Service, at the uniform rate of $65 per month each during the period of actual employment, and $3 per day for each occasion of service at other times; compensation of volunteers at life-saving and lifeboat stations for actual and deserving service rendered upon any occasion of disaster or in any effort to save persons from drowning, at such rate, not to exceed $10 for each volunteer, as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine; pay of volunteer crews for drill and exercise; fuel for stations and houses of refuge; repairs and outfits for same; rebuilding and improvement of same, including use of additional land where necessary; supplies and provisions for houses of refuge and for shipwrecked persons succored at stations; traveling expenses of officers under orders from the Treasury Department; commutation of quarters and purchase of fuel in kind for officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service detailed for duty in the Life-Saving Service; for carrying out the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of the act approved May 4, 1882; for draft animals and their maintenance; for telephone lines and care of same; and contingent expenses, including freight, storage, rent, repairs to apparatus, labor, medals, stationery, newspapers for statistical purposes, advertising, and all other necessary expenses not included under any other head of life-saving stations on the coasts of the United States, $1,729,110.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 37,

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 37, line 17, by striking out "sixty-five" and inserting "seventy-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 17, strike out "sixty-five" and insert "seventy-five." Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I make the point of order against this amendment.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Iowa rises to make a point of order. Does the gentleman make the point of Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I make the point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The law fixes these salaries specifically. There has been no proposition to change that law, and this is an absolute attempt to change it on an appropriation

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. In your opinion do you think $75 a month is too much pay for one of the hard-working, heroic life savers?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I decline to answer any such question as that. Mr. Chairman, the statute fixes these salaries, this amendment is not in order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the fact that the law fixes the salaries of the men in the Life-Saving Service at $65 a month; but when you have to buy the necessaries of life and have got to support a family, that is very little. Sixty-five dollars a month will not go as far now as it did a few years ago.

I do not believe the gentleman from Iowa has anybody working out in his State for $65 a month. Out in Iowa, I understand, the lowest wages paid is $100 a month. I hope the point of order will not be insisted upon. These life savers along our coast are compelled to do hard and continuous work all hours of the night and day, and I ask now that my amendment be agreed to, so that the salary be increased $10 a month. That is very little.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Olcott, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25242) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 24987) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus or unallotted lands in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. BRANDEGEE, and Mr. DUBOIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 24991) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Frye, Mr. Elkins, and Mr. Berry as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved. That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 6906) to provide for the incorporation of banks within the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution and bill of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was re-

H. J. Res. 246. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington.

H. R. 11040. An act to authorize the receivers of public moneys for land districts to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States certain sums embraced in their accounts of unearned fees and unofficial moneys.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

American ethnology: For continuing ethnological researches among the American Indians and the natives of Hawaii, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employees and the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, $40,000, of which sum not exceeding $1,500 may be used for rent of building.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last ord. This item carries $40,000 for the Bureau of Ethnology. The Bureau of Ethnology is now devoting its attention very largely to bringing out the book which has been under preparation for some time, being a complete résumé and description of all the tribes of American Indians. It has been desired that the Bureau shall extend its work far enough to make an examination of Hawaiians and the Samoans, the aborigines in both cases almost having disappeared, and will very soon disappear. But with the amount as stated in this appropriation it will not be possible for the Bureau of Ethnology to make this examination in Hawaii and Samoa. It probably could be done in the course of a year if the committee would give the amount asked for this year, which I think was $50,000 in the estimates. Would not the gentleman be willing to pass the item or to increase the amount from $40,000 to $50,000 under the special circumstances of the case?

Mr. Chairman, I may say that two Mr. SMITH of Iowa. years in succession the Department has sought to extend this investigation to Samoa and both years the committee has deemed it inadvisable to permit such extension. It has already been extended to Hawaii by the modification of this language.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the money is not sufficient to carry it out. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I may say that that is a matter on which there may be a difference of opinion. This Bureau has been at work upon the study of American ethnology for a great many years, and it is the opinion of the committee that there must some time come an abatement of the quantity of new material upon this subject. I would not, so far as I am concerned, consent to consider any amendment favorably to increase this appropriation. The matter was quite fully considered in subcommittee and rejected. If the gentleman says that he has any express or implied understanding with the chairman of the committee, who is now absent for a few moments, I am willing it should be passed. Mr. MANN. I have no implied or express understanding. I endeavored a while ago to get the attention of the chairman in the hope that I might have an implied or express understanding, but as yet I have none. It is a fact that the Bureau of Ethnology is working on this book, which will not be large in size probably, but which requires great study in reference to every tribe of Indians, both of the past and of the present. This requires an enormous amount of research and work.

While the authority has been given to make the examination of the Hawaiians, the money has not been provided, and it does seem to me that we should have some authentic statement in reference to the aborigines of the Hawaiian Islands, who have almost disappeared, so as to preserve in the archives of the Government that information. I dare say if the appropriation be not increased this year that it will never be obtained.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I should greatly regret to have information of so much importance to the world lost, but this Bureau was founded in 1879. It has been receiving appropriations of $40,000 and upward for the last sixteen years. It does seem to the committee that there ought to be some points at which the original sources of information upon the American aborigines would approach exhaustion. But apparently this Bureau every year can find an opportunity here at home to spend just as much money upon that old subject as ever it could. We believe that the amount of money heretofore given is available now for the study of the aborigines in Hawaii, because we believe that certainly such progress has been made in the investigation here at home as would warrant a reduction of the expenditure here.

Mr. MANN. My friend from Iowa suggests that the sources of information in reference to the aborigines in America ought to have been exhausted at this time. If he was investigating the source of the information on the subject, I believe it would have been exhausted long ago.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. about that. [Laughter.] The gentleman is certainly correct

The Clerk read as follows:

For protection of Casa Grande Ruin, in Pinal County, near Florence, Ariz., and for excavation on the reservation, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, $3,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that this appropriation is for the purpose of making excavations in some old ruins in Arizona, to dig up the bones of prehistoric people who died long before the Paleozoic age. [Laughter.] The item expends $3,000 to dig up the moldy and crumbling remains of people who died thousands of years ago and bring them to Washington to be exhibited in the Smithsonian Institution. I am opposed to legislating away the people's money for these dead and decaying bones while we deny the living a decent livelihood. [Laughter and applause.] If we offer an amendment here increasing the salary of a poor workman $10 a month, some Republican on the other side gets up and raises the point of order. If we try to get the life savers enough to keep body and soul together and take care of their little families, some Republican on the other side gets up and raises a point of order. And here we see in this bill $3,000 of the people's money appropriated to be wasted in digging up the remains of people who died thousands and thousands of years ago and who care nothing about what is going on here now or what becomes of their bones. [Laughter.] It reminds me very much of a stanza in a poem that Bret Harte wrote a good many years ago—thesc objections by the Republicans do. I can not remember all of the poem, but I recollect one stanza in it pertinent to this discussion, which goes about as follows:

Then Abner Dean, of Angels, raised a point of order, when A chunk of old red sandstone struck him in the abdomen. [Laughter.]

He smiled a kind of sickly smile, and curled up on the floor; And subsequent proceedings interested him no more.

[Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Astrophysical Observatory: For maintenance of Astrophysical Observatory, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including salaries of assistants, the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, apparatus, making necessary observations in high altitudes, repairs and alterations of buildings, and miscellaneous expenses, $13,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information regarding this astrophysical matter. I would like to know from the gentleman from Minnesota for what purpose this appropriation is made?

Mr. TAWNEY. The purpose is expressed in the language in which the appropriation is made.

Mr. SULZER. Has it anything to do with the sun spots? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not inform the gentleman.
Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, such ignorance is bliss. But being the chairman of the committee, it seems to me the gentle-man ought to know something about what the appropriation is

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state to the gentleman that if he wishes to enlighten himself on the subject, and will turn to the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, he will have a full explanation of that service.

Mr SULZER. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this appropriation of $13,000 is for the purpose of ascertaining just what the sun spots mean—just what is going to happen on account of them-

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the Committee on Appropriations is not responsible for the understanding of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. I asked what the gentleman's understanding was in regard to this matter and he was unable to give it. is responsible for that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I said if the gentleman would turn to the hearings he would see.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SULZER. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I have the floor. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman had con-

Mr. SULZER. Not yet. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is an unnecessary appropriation of the large sum of $13,000 for the purpose of ascertaining, if such a thing be possible, the relations of the sun spots to the solar universe. [Laughter, ] Well, now, how did it all come about? A scientist in Pittsburg, when he first observed these sun apots—and he didn't see them in the first place, because some humble person looking through a piece of darkened glass saw these spots on the sun and called somebody's attention to it, and finally it got to the knowledge of the old professor, who got out his telescope and saw the spots, and viewed them with alarm. After carefully considering the phenomenon he deliberately declared that they portended evil; that there would be the greatest electrical disturbances in Pittsburg, Washington, and New York the next day that ever was known in the history of the world. The declaration impressed known in the history of the world. The declaration impressed me. I watched very carefully for these electrical disturbances all that day in Washington, and I was disappointed. I saw nothing and I heard nothing unusual. I can truthfully testify here that during that whole day we had the most calm and peaceful day in the House of Representatives I have ever observed here during my experience. The sun shone as ever, old mother earth looked the same, and there was the same bland and childlike smile on the countenance of dear old Uncle Joe. [Laughter.] No electrical disturbance anywhere, just the same old sun and same old earth. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, he made a mistake in the day. He meant to-day

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few words more and I shall conclude. Seriously, I have been fighting here to the best of my ability to get a little increase of pay for some poor people working for the Government, and I think it is a waste of the people's money to appropriate $13,000 to ascertain what the sun spots are going to do to us now or hereafter.

[Laughter.]

So far as I am personally concerned, I am not worried. They do not trouble me a bit. I do not think they are going to trouble anybody on this little planet. The other day, in looking up what they portended, going back to the days of the Ptolemys, I found out that these sun spots meant much or absolutely nothing, according to the superstition of the age, because every man who has ever written about them, from the ancient days down to the present time, has differed with everybody else who has written about them—no two astronomers have ever agreed about them—so I take nobody's opinion concerning the matter but my own, and my own opinion is they are there, and that they will stay there until they go away. [Laughter and applause.] And while they are there they are not going to hurt auybody down here; and if they do, then it is time enough for us to appropriate money, and not to find out what these sun spots are, but to take care of the maimed and the injured and the stricken caused by the calamity. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Sulzer) there were-ayes 24, noes 72

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the bint of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] point of no quorum. [After counting.] The Chair finds 122 Members present, and the amendment is rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Building for National Museum: For completing the construction of the building for the National Museum, and for each and every purpose connected with the same, $1.250,000: Provided, That if the superintendent of buildings and grounds, Library of Congress, now in charge of the construction of the new Museum building and the disbursing of all appropriations made for the work, be at any time incapacitated to continue in such charge, the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution is hereby empowered to take charge of the construction and to disburse appropriations made for the same.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph beginning on line 23, page 43, down to line 5, page 44, as being new legislation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will reserve it; yes.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman to do that in order that I may make a statement. The proviso is subject to the point of order. The present National Museum is being constructed under an appropriation which provides that all of the disbursements shall be made on the order of Mr. Green, who is the architect in charge of the Congressional Library, and who has charge of the construction of the building. Mr. Green's health is not of the best, and he may be required to be absent from the city, and it may be impossible for him to O. K. the vouchers for disbursements. The Board of Regents includes the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Howard, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Dalzell, and myself, from the House.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How is Mr. Green employed, on a commission or on a salary

Mr. MANN. I am unable to inform the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. He is employed on a salary.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. At how much?

Mr. TAWNEY. At $2,000 a year.
Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope in view of the statement the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. On the statement made by the gentheman from Illinois I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the lerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the sum of $10,000 appropriated for the fiscal year 1899 by the "Act concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees," approved June 1, 1898, which was reappropriated by the act of June 30, 1906, is hereby reappropriated and made available for expenses that may be incurred under said act during the fiscal year 1908.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of line 18:

"To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate in regard to the use and necessity for block-signal system and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains, including experimental tests, at the discretion of the Commission, of said signal system and appliances only as may be furnished in connection with such investigation free of cost to the Government, in accordance with the provisions of the joint resolution approved June 30, 1906, $500,000."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I believe this to be a very important piece of legislation. I am of the opinion that the amendment is too narrow. It limits the inquiry by providing that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall make an investigation of the block-signal system and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains. I think the whole subject, if we have power, of safety devices, of inventions calculated to promote the safety of railroad travel, should be covered by the bill.

Now, I suggest this-and I think it can be done and not make the amendment out of order—eliminate the word "automatic," in the third line, so that it would read: "The use and necessity for block-signal systems and appliances for the control of railway trains." I believe it would broaden the power of the railway trains." I believe it would broaden the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission if the word "automatic" were omitted. As it is now, there are only two classes of safety devices that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be permitted to investigate, and those are block-signal systems and devices for the automatic control of railway trains. There may be many small devices in existence that, if they were brought to notice, would greatly promote the safety of railway travel, and I wish the gentleman would consent to the striking out of the word "automatic" and allow the Commission to investigate all appliances for the control of railway trains. would cover automatic control as well.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if it were a new proposition I might be willing to consent to what the gentleman suggests; but the amendment which I have offered is in accordance with the joint resolution already enacted into the law, is not subject to a point of order, and I have presented the amendment to the members of the Committee on Appropriations, who have made no objection to it. Therefore I would not feel that I had the right under the circumstances, having called the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to this subject, to widen the scope of this amendment. Hence I would be compelled to make a point of order on any change in the provision.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "automatic," in the third line. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. I believe the amendment to the amend-ment does not violate any rule of the House, and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Maxx], that the word "automatic" be eliminated, would be in order and would be within the resolution that the amendment refers to. The provision would then provide for the investigation of block-signal systems and appliances for the control of railway trains, and under the resolution that is referred to in the amendment I am confident a provision with the word "automatic" out would be in order. I have no doubt about it. It is not necessary that an amendment be in the exact words of the statute if it comes within the scope of the statute. That is all the rules of the House require.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the Clerk report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana? The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 of the amendment strike out the word "automatic;" so as to read: "For the control of railway trains."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. Chairman, the joint resolution provides for the investigation, etc., of block-signal systems and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains. That means the automatic control. If the word "automatic" is stricken out and "control" is left, that would include many things which are not included by the provisions of the joint resolution. And it seems to me that if—although it is in accordance with the provisions of the joint resolution, etc.—the word "automatic" were stricken out, the amendment would be subject to a point of order; and if the amendment with the word "automatic" out has been subject to a point of order, I take it that striking the word out is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe that is the proper test. pose the amendment had been offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], in the first instance, with the word "auto-matic" out; would it have been subject to a point of order? I do not think it would under the resolution which he read. I repeat that it is not necessary that a resolution or a provision be in the exact terms of the authorizing statute, so that it comes within the general terms of the statute, and the construction that would be given the provision would be in the light of the resolution originally authorizing the investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] whether or not his description, by striking out the word "automatic" here, would not let in a great many things? That is, would not the scope of the investigation be much wider and more extended than if the term "automatic" is included?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the Chair please, the resolution or amendment says it shall be in accordance with the resolution that the gentleman read. That resolution is a part of the amendment, so that the investigation of appliances for the control of railroad trains would be construed to be the appliances provided for in the resolution conferring authority upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to make the investigation in the first place and for which this appropriation is to be made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit an interruption for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will. Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] if it is not a fact that this amendment changes entirely the character and extent of the investigation which the joint resolution authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to make-changing it from a limited investigation to an unlimited one.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman answers that question, I will be glad if he will answer another with it. Does the gentleman believe that striking out the word "automatic" and inserting the rest would permit the investigation of headlights?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know; I think it would. That is, if the original law were broad enough, but we are discussing this point of order.

Mr. MANN. I understand. That is on the point of order I

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Striking out the word "automatic," it would authorize the investigation of the subject of headlights unless it be limited by other provisions of the amendment. Now, the amendment provides for an investigation in accordance with the provisions of joint resolution approved June 30, 1906. So the kind of appliances that might be investigated would be the kind of appliances described in the resolution of June 30, 1906, because the amendment expressly so provides.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly clear that under the original resolution the Commission would have no authority, for instance, to investigate headlights, which can not be automatic appliances for the control of railway trains. Thus far I know of no way of making an automatic headlight, so that I think the striking out of the word "automatic" would permit an investigation of headlights. It would make the amendment subject to the point of order. Now, what does the amendment which I offer propose? It follows the language of the resolution except as to experimental tests. It is limited to those which are furnished free of cost to the Government, and then, as a mere matter of reference, refers to the joint resolution. I take it that it is merely descriptive, often inserted in statutes for the purpose of directing attention of the parties to the place where the authority came from, and the appropriation here is described at the head of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the matter is not entirely free from doubt, but is inclined to sustain the point of order.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is debatable. I only want to say a word or two upon it. I simply want to express my disappointment because the investigation is limited to only two particular subjects—the investigation of block-signal systems and devices for the automatic control of railroad trains. The question of adopting safety appliances for the promotion of the safety of travelers on the railways is a vital question, one that interests every person in the Republic; and I believe the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to be authorized to make a careful, a scientific, and a thorough investigation of all devices that may seem to possess any merit that may possibly add to the safety of the railroad service and promote the safety of travel on railroad trains.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to keep informed regarding compliance with the act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, approved March 2, 1893, including the employment of inspectors to execute and enforce the requirements of the said act, $100,000; said inspectors shall also be required to make examination of the construction, adaptability, design, and condition of all mail cars used on any railroad in the United States and make report thereon, a copy of which report shall be transmitted to the Postmaster-General.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word,

I reserve the point of order. Mr. MANN.

Mr. PERKINS. The point of order is reserved; so that I make the motion in order to get some information in reference to the clause.

Mr. Chairman, just a moment ago we adopted an amendment appropriating $50,000 to investigate certain safety appliances. It was said, and justly said, that the prevalence of accidents upon our railroads seems to increase instead of diminish. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to this appropriation. As I understand, since 1893, for fourteen years, there has been an annual appropriation of $100,000 which has been paid for the employ of men whose duty it has been to see whether the railroads complied with the act to promote the safety of employees and travelers. Does the gentleman think that the results of the investigation as to the safety of employees and travelers have been such as to lead us to believe that this great appropriation during the long period of years has been accompanied by any useful results? Why is it, after all these years, they have this very day made a special appropriation of $50,000 to investigate one thing that might increase the safety of travelers and employees?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. While it may not be material, the gentleman is in error as to the magnitude of the appropriation in prior years

Mr. PERKINS. It is a hundred thousand dollars this year. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The appropriations have been rising and the force increasing, and it has not been, as the gentleman Suggests, $100,000 during past years.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me one question, if it will not interrupt him? The gentleman says the appropriations have been increasing. Has there been any increased safety either to employees or travelers that has accompanied the increase in the amount paid for inspectors whose duty has been, as prescribed by the act, to bring about that result?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure. The law referred to in this appropriation is the law providing for automatic couplings and air brakes.

Mr. PERKINS. Is that all that is provided by the law?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is substantially all that is covered by the law. Mr. MANN.

And handholds, and everything of that kind. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is substantially what is covered by the statute referred to in this section. If the gentleman now asks me whether or not the enforcement of the law for automatic couplings and air brakes has had any effect to increase the safety of employees or travelers, I answer him that the record shows that it has enormously decreased the injuries

Mr. PERKINS. I do not question that statement for a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And this is an appropriation for the necessary inspectors to see that those laws, which primarily require the automatic coupling and the air brake and some minor matters, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, are enforced and obeyed; and no money has been more wisely invested by the Government, if human life and human blood are to be estimated of any worth. Now, the law is being fairly well enforced with reference to those types of safety appliances. The vast increase in travel and in the transportation of freight has brought about other dangers and many disasters. We seek by the resolution that has been heretofore passed, and by the amendment which has just been put into the bill on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], to avoid other dangers to the public which are of the utmost importance to be While these laws heretofore passed have proven highly effective and these means of enforcing these laws have been excellent, new questions have arisen. The crowded condition of the railway tracks imperils the lives of our people, and we now want something that, unlike the human mind, will never flag, will never become dazed, will never fail to act, but something which automatically and mechanically will protect the safety of our people. That is what we are in search of now, and this has no relation to the appropriation covered by the item to which the gentleman has just referred.

Mr. PERKINS. I entirely sympathize, as every Member of the House sympathizes, with the objects that we all seek to obtain; but still I am desirous of a little information as to how far the money that we are spending is judiciously spent with a profitable result, and so I would ask the gentleman, who says that the act of 1893 prescribes the use of only two appliances

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And some minor ones.

Mr. PERKINS. Which I suppose have been adopted by every railroad system in the United States, have they not?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In general; yes.
Mr. PERKINS. I ask the gentleman how many employees are paid under this provision for which we appropriate $100,000 a year?

Mr. OLMSTED. And what they do? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There are in the neighborhood of twenty of these employees.

Mr. PERKINS. Twenty, at $5,000 apiece?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no; this includes their traveling You understand that even if the Government could have obtained free transportation in years gone by it was not deemed desirable to give notice to railway employees that "here comes the inspector"—

Mr. TAWNEY. Or to railway officials either.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And so perhaps defeat the very pur-pose of the inspection, and it has always been the practice, therefore, to pay the full fare of all these inspectors, as well as their salaries and their subsistence.

That is entirely proper. I would like to ask Mr. PERKINS. the gentleman if he thinks it is necessary, with reference to improvements that have come into general use, to keep twenty men in constant employ to see whether or not such things as these couplers, which every man can see are used, are being used by the railroads?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say that twenty men to cover the United States and see that these automatic couplers are kept in repair and are actually used as automatic couplers, to see that the requisite percentage of cars is equipped with the air brake, and that the air brake is actually used, is indeed a scanty force for this country.

Mr. MANN. Last year I tried to get the number increased.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Florida can not take me off my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum can be raised at any time. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair feels sure that all the Members in the House have been counted, and eighty-six are present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest that the chairman move that the committee rise.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that it was the desire of the committee to continue reading this bill until 7 o'clock in the hope of getting through it as fast as we possibly can. The bill is a very large one and will take considerable time. There are important items in it that will have to be discussed, and in the next hour we can pass over in the neighborhood of forty or fifty pages before reaching those items upon which there will be very much controversy.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why not have a night session?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is impossible under the present condition to have a night session. If we were to rise and take a recess it would be impossible to get back into Committee of the Whole, because we would not have a quorum.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, certainly there would be a quorum.

Mr. TAWNEY. We would not have a quorum of the House, and it requires a quorum of the House to go into Committee of the Whole. I hope the gentleman from Florida will withdraw his point of no quorum and let us go on for an hour at least.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I merely rise for the purpose of requesting the gentleman from Minnesota to move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Enough Members have come into the Hall so that the Chair has been able to count 101 present. A quorum is present, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 13, noes 90.
Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. CLARK of Florida demanded tellers. The CHAIRMAN. Fourteen gentlemen have risen, not a suffi-cient number, and tellers are refused. Does the gentleman from Illinois press his point of order? Mr. MANN. I will withdraw the point of order and move to strike out the last word. As to this portion of the item pro-viding for the examination by safety-appliance inspectors of railway mail cars, what is the purpose, and has the appropriation been increased somewhat this year, so that there will be an increase to provide for this matter?

Mr. SMTTH of Iowa. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that under the law, as the gentleman is aware, the railway mail clerks do not have the protection and rights of passengers. They are subject to more hazards than the ordinary passenger, without his rights. It is strenuously contended by the railway mail clerks that many dangerous mail cars are operated in the United States. A movement has been started to secure a distinct force of inspectors for the purpose of investigating the safety and adaptability of these cars and to look after the safety of the railway mail clerks. It seemed to the committee that as the Government already had a force of skilled inspectors-mechanical inspectors-that possibly if they as they travel about the country could inspect these mail cars and their reports were then forwarded by the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Post-Office Department, the entire control of the situation remaining in the Post-Office Department, it simply availing itself of the information furnished, the great expense to the Govern-ment of appointing a new force of mechanical inspectors might be saved.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers in the bill to the adaptability. Does the gentleman think that these safety-appliance inspectors are the proper persons to judge of the adaptability of the inside of a car for postal service, or is it simply intended to cover the construction of the car?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In the first place, these inspectors are not to judge of anything. They are to report conditions.

Mr. MANN. Well, that means judgment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Post-Office Department will judge of the adaptability of the interior arrangement, but the purpose is simply to have these mechanical experts report as to the adaptability, as to the strength, and like things, in order that the Post-Office Department may utilize that information without additional cost to the Government.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Independent Treasury: For contingent expenses under the requirements of section 3653 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public money, and for transportation of notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, $240,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the next paragraph may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida objects. Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio. He asked for what purposes the gentleman from Ohio rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, it is always in order to suggest the absence of a quorum, because if we have no quorum we can not do business, not even to listen to the gentleman from

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is quite right, and the Chair will again count.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, before the announcement of the result I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not competent for the Chair to count Members who are in the cloakrooms?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has counted the head of every Member looking out of the cloakrooms that is visible, and the Chair finds eighty Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. Mr. PAYNE. The regular order is to count, and I hope the Chair will keep on counting.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair has announced the count. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that the regular order would be to call the roll to ascertain the absentees and to compel the absentees to come into the House. That is the regular order, if the gentleman demands it.

Mr. CAPRON. But I do not understand that we can call the roll in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair has announced the result: therefore, there is no quorum.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Too many gentleman are seeking to address the House at once.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. How many does it take to constitute a quorum in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then there is not a quorum present. The CHAIRMAN. There is not a quorum present. The gentleman from Mississippi has demanded the regular order, which will be to call the roll and bring in the absentees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not the roll call for the purpose of ascertaining the names of the Members not present?

The CHAIRMAN. That is right. If the gentleman insists on the regular order, the Chair will order the roll to be called.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the Chairman going to call the roll in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. We do that in order to ascertain the absentees, in order that they may be reported to the House, under the rules of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that the committee do now rise.

I do not see the necessity of that. Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to know whether any point of no quorum has yet been made. I have heard it only suggested.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; the point of no quorum has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum was made, as the Chair understood, by the gentleman from Mississippi. The Chair has counted eighty Members present. The gentleman from Mississippi has called for the regular order, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called.

The SPEAKER took the chair.
The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, finding itself without a quorum, caused the roll to be called. There were ascertained to be present 116, and I am directed by the committee to report to you the following absentees:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that the committee, having found itself without a quorum, directed the roll to be called, and reports the absentees. It appears that a quorum of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is present, namely, 116, and therefore, under the rule, the committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. Watson in the chair, The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of minor coin: For transportation of minor coin, $18,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, minor coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to resume my application that this paragraph in the bill be passed over without prejudice. I want to say to the gentlemen on both sides of the House, so far as they could be consulted in connection with the committee, this was understood sometime ago in connection with another matter. It is a very important one, and it would take but a very short time to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] asks unanimous consent that the second section, on page 48, be passed without prejudice, the section having reference to the transportation of minor coins. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection in view of the importance of the matter and of the situation. The whole committee, so far as I know, understand it in that way.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] that from now on until the 4th of March there will not be another unanimous consent granted in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to discuss the section?

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to discuss the section and make several amendments. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "transportation," in line 8, page 48, the following: "of silver coin, including fractional silver coin, by registered mail or otherwise, $120,000, and."

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition, I submit, if adopted, will be in precise accordance with the legislation in the sundry civil bill for the present fiscal year. It will be in substantial accordance with the sundry civil bills commencing with the year 1881 until this Congress; and I believe it has never been proposed to completely withdraw the patronage of the United States over the distribution of fractional currency or minor silver coin until this year. This is the first year in the history of the coinage of fractional silver that I believe it was even proposed that the Government of the United States should not be instrumental in some way, and in the way of transportation, in distributing fractional silver all over this country. Last year the Committee on Appropriations were good enough to unanimously decide that they were still in favor of the distribution at the Government expense of fractional silver coin. This year they are opposed to it. Some say it is unconstitutional to do this thing. I know no provision of the Constitution that affects it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who says so?

Mr. KEIFER. Well, the gentleman asked the question. I will be glad to let the gentleman from Massachusetts answer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking for information.

Mr. KEIFER. You ask him. Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. He made that statement, I undertake to say, and I think in your presence.

I think not. Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. KEIFER. And standing by your side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He did not make such a statement as

Mr. SULLIVAN. Well, now— Mr. KEIFER. You suggested it was unconstitutional to carry silver, did you not?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do not know whether it is unconstitu-tional for the Government to carry coin at the expense of the Government to the bankers, but it is highly immoral.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is a little evasive in his answer; but let me say Mr. Chairman, that we have been discovering recently that there are a great many immoral things that have gone on from the beginning of this Government up to the present time.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Especially in New York.

[Laughter.

Mr. KEIFER. It is said by the gentlemen who live at the side of one of the subtreasuries of this country that they do not want the distribution of fractional silver coin or silver dollars because they can get silver by going across the street, or near by, in their own cities. But over the great territory of the West and the great territory of the South, most of which is remote from the subtreasuries where silver dollars and fractional currency can be obtained, they are cut off absolutely and entirely if we are going to pass this bill in the form it is reported here.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I helped the gentleman discuss this question a year ago, and I agree with him. Is it proposed as an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. KEIFER. An amendment is pending now which if adopted will simply continue a condition which has been going on in this country ever since 1881, perpetuated through civil sundry bills passed by Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Payment for the shipment?

Mr. KEIFER. Payment for the shipment of fractional silver and silver dollars.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, your amendment is pending? Mr. KEIFER. It is exactly the same as was contained in the sundry civil bill of last year.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I raise the point of order of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, there was a very full discussion of the matter

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] raises the point of no quorum. The Chair will state that the roll, just called within the last ten minutes, disclosed the presence of a quorum.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point, Mr. Chairman, that the point of no quorum made by the gentleman is dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair at this time sustains the point made by the gentleman from Minnesota that it is dilatory, because in the opinion of the Chair at this time, so recently after the roll has been called, it is dilatory.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. A parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. How long after a roll call before it is in order to call the attention of the Chair to the absence of quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that depends on circumstances, and the Chair will deal with that question when it comes up. For the present the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keiferl is recognized.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I regret to allude to a matter that is purely personal. About a month ago I agreed to go at this hour to the Georgetown University to attend to an important matter in connection with an oratorical contest, and they will very soon be waiting. That is the reason I was very anxious personally that this matter should be passed over. I have no means of notifying them. But I regard the pending question as of the gravest importance to this country. suggestion has been made before that the Government should not be put to the expense of paying for the keeping out of silver, and when that suggestion was made it was answered. By reason of this provision we are now keeping in circulation about $85,000,000 of the $560,000,000 silver that the Government has coined. At the last report, on the 1st of February, 1907, we had about $5,000,000 more in circulation than we had one year before. We have been able from year to year to utilize the silver, and there is a disposition which shows clearly that the silver of this country is demanded.

At this very hour, everywhere in the money centers of this country, they are appealing to Congress and to various schemes of the Treasury to get out some smaller currency—something with which to make change, something for convenience, one and two dollar bills, and the silver is the cheapest thing that we Gentlemen talk about paying the expense of transportahave. Why, we pay the expense of transporting gold from mint tion. to subtreasury. According to the provisions of this very bill, we are providing to pay for carrying paper currency; but when we come to silver coin people seem to have the idea that there is some strange reason why it should be struck down. It is a most important thing to this country that we should maintain our silver dollars on a parity with our gold dollars, and if we are going to lock the silver coin up in the Treasury, it will be disparaged to that extent and will be withdrawn from the useful circulating medium of this country.

Now, as to the fractional silver. We had in circulation in fractional currency, called "subsidiary silver," belonging to the Government, under date of January 1, 1907, $127,841,368. We had on February 1 in circulation $124,120,938, and by reason of the deficiency in the appropriation, which they were fearing would come, we went down in the distribution of subsidiary silver coin between January 1, 1907, and February 1, 1907, nearly $4,000,000 in its circulation. If we now say that henceforth the subsidiary silver coin of this country is to be transported from the custom-houses by the people by whatever means they can get it, within a year we will hear a cry that our subsidiary silver coin has practically gone out of circulation, and we will hear an answering cry.

So that we are to-day not attempting to do only what we attempted in the last sundry civil bill, to wit, to depreciate the usefulness of the silver dollars, but we are proposing to wipe out practically $127,000,000 more of the subsidiary coin, so far as getting it to the people is concerned. My amendment, I repeat again, as offered simply puts into the bill that which the law for this year has, and does not increase the amount proposed to be appropriated by a single dollar.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say at the outset that the failure to carry the appropriation for the transportation of fractional silver is the result of inadvertence in making up the bill. I have the original bill from which it was made up, and the committee intended and supposed until now that that item was carried in this bill. It was the purpose of the committee, and no one thought otherwise until now to omit the appropriation of $125,000 for the transportation of silver dollars. f the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is voted down, I propose to offer an amendment restoring the item for the transportation of fractional currency.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when this matter was before the committee a year ago the Secretary of the Treasury was interrogated upon the question of the continuance of this practice of paying the expense of transporting the money from the subtreasury to the banks. The Secretary said: "I do not see the occasion for the Government paying for the transportation of silver any more. The reasons that existed in that provision do not exist now."

Now this transportation of silver dollars is primarily, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the express companies. It was demonstrated in the hearings and in the debate on this proposition at the last session that the abuses that have grown up under this provision in an appropriation bill has cost the Government thousands upon thousands of dollars every year. The House appropriated $120,000 for this service in the last sundry civil appropriation act. There was a deficiency of $10,000 which Congress had previously refused to grant. There is a deficiency estimated now, although we gave them $130,000 last year. There is an item of deficiency of $10,000 for the current year, and they estimate for the service $125,000 for next fiscal year.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. If the Department used this sum and asked for more, why is it not given? Does not that indicate that there is a use for this appropriation and that there is a demand for it?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is certainly a demand for it. Government of the United States were to furnish clothing to the people of this country, there would be an enormous demand for an appropriation to pay the expenses of giving it to them, and there would be Representatives on this floor to defend the proposition. The service is a service that the Government is per-forming for the benefit of the banks of this country. Now the banks pay the cost of transporting the currency. There is no reason why the Government should continue longer the transportation of the silver dollars. At the hearings before the committee at the last session of Congress it was shown that there were cases where a great abuse occurred. One particular case was cited where a bank at Yonkers wanted several thousand They were shipped by the United States exsilver dollars. press up to Binghamton, 250 miles. Then they were transferred to another express company and shipped 240 miles farther, and then they were transferred to another express company and shipped to Yonkers, traveling a distance of over 500 miles, although the actual distance from the subtreasury in New

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think it is fair to punish the whole United States because they rob the Government in New York City?

Mr. TAWNEY. We are not punishing anybody by omitting this appropriation. If a bank in the city represented so ably by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines] desires to get $5,000 from the subtreasury, that bank can obtain the money by paying the expense. That is a convenience to the bank. Why should the Government pay for that convenience any more than it should pay for any other convenience enjoyed by any other individual?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. A citizen goes to the bank, the receptacle for the money in the city and the country, and asks for silver money to pay—to whom? The negroes down South, the laboring people down South, who think first of God Almighty, then the Constitution, and then the silver dollar of the daddies.

daddies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida objects.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to strike out the last word. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out the last word, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, we have here the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, a man charged with the responsibility of administration, a man who knows more about the practical operation of this law or the necessity for this appropriation than any man on the floor of this House.

Mr. MONDELL. What does he say?
Mr. TAWNEY. He recommends it.
Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no.

Mr. TAWNEY. At the last session of Congress, Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no, no. Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I have the hearings right here. I

I do not see the occasion for the Government to pay transportation silver any more. The reasons that existed for that previously do of silver any more, not exist to-day.

And the hearing proceeds for four pages.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield?

I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is not the true state of affairs: Do we not have a subtreasury in the city of New York; also one at Boston, one at Baltimore, and one at Philadelphia? Is it not true that every bank in those sections of the country, being in close proximity to a subtreasury, can secure silver coin at comparatively little expense? In the South and in the West we have no subtreasuries, the banks there being far removed from the subtreasuries, and consequently the burden is much greater on the banks in those sections of the country that want silver coin than upon banks closer to a subtreasury. Is it not unjust and unfair to those sections of the country—the South and West—where we do not have so many subtreasuries, to keep out this provision that was stricken from this bill last year, and not only subject the people there to great inconvenience, but an unjust expense?

Mr. TAWNEY. Why, Mr. Chairman, the logic of that contention would necessarily lead to the Government transporting everything—all classes of money for the banks—because some banks are farther removed from the subtreasury than other

Mr. SULLIVAN. Or of establishing a subtreasury in every village of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, that is the very contingency that I predicted a year ago would arise—that is, if this provision went out there would be immediately an increased demand for the establishment of subtreasuries, and the South, or rather the southeastern section of our country, is clamoring for the establishment of a subtreasury.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and have been for fourteen years-ever since I have been in Congress.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; and their demand ought to be met. The South ought to have another subtreasury.

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be true.

Mr. BURLESON. And, Mr. Chairman, Texas, for the Southwest, is also clamoring for a subtreasury at this very time, and it ought to have one, and I believe she will get it, unless this provision is again inserted in this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. But it is not in consequence of a failure to secure a deficiency of $10,000 during the last year that this demand for a subtreasury is coming up here from the South. The conditions that are demanding that are not related in the least to the proposition of the transportation of silver dollars.

Mr. BURLESON. But I do not agree with the gentleman. Mr. TAWNEY. It is simply a gratuity to every bank in the United States, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], as every other man who proposes it, knows that that is the fact, and that is why I believe we should cease appropriating $135, 000 every year for the transportation of silver dollars for the benefit of the banks of this country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, for ten years L have steadily in this House fought for the perpetuation of this appropriation to pay for transporting silver coin, etc. For a number of Congresses we were successful. For the last two or three Congresses we have failed. Why, Mr. Chairman, was it ever inserted in an appropriation or elsewhere? Why was it ever the law? For the reason that the silver dollar, being heavy, it was claimed that it would not actually circulate and help to transact the financial business of the country. We all know to a large extent that was the fact before we substituted the silver certificate to represent the heavy silver dollar. I want the gentleman from Minnesota particularly to listen now to a few things I am going to tell him. Mr. Chairman, his party-and I am not going to make a party question or a silver issue here. The subject is way above either; it involves the welfare of a large portion of this country-South and Westwhich can not get the silver dollar to use in the transaction of their business. The people of the South and West are particularly devoted to the silver dollar as a piece of money for the transaction of business and as a circulating medium. They can not get it under the present law unless, Mr. Chairman, they send away off to some subtreasury for the purpose of getting it, and pay the express charges on it. Recently Secretary Shaw has been South and has been West, and voluntarily said to the people in the Southwestern portion of this country: "If you will get together and agree on a suitable location or city where we can build a subtreasury, I will recommend it." That was done, and Birmingham selected; but the matter was carried before the Ways and Means Committee, and by a nonpartisan vote of 7 to 6, or something like that, it was defeated; so we have only one subtreasury in the South, and that is at New Orleans. The people of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Arkansas, and the whole Southeast must send to New Orleans, where possibly they may get it. The Middle West is in about the same

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the gentleman who is the authority for saying Secretary Shaw recommended the estab-

Ishment of another subtreasury?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, it was pretty hard to get at exactly what he did say, I will say to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The committee understood from his letter that he thought it was advisable, so far as the interests of the Government were concerned-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not catch what the gentleman said.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We construed his letter as undertaking to say, and did say, that, so far as the interests of the Government were concerned, he did not think it was necessary to establish another subtreasury; but then he went on to say that if we did establish one in the Southeast, he thought we ought to establish one or two more in the Northwest.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to ask the gentleman before he takes his seat did he not also say that there ought to be two or three treasuries in the East abolished?

Mr. GROSVENOR. He said if we established any more in the South and Northwest we might with great propriety do away with some of those already existing. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for the statement he has made. Now, my information, and I have a letter written to me in which Secretary Shaw said—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have been interrupted and I am much interested in this. I ask for five minutes more.

The gentleman from Tennessee asks unan-The CHAIRMAN. imous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, the Secretary, whom we are always glad to hear and entertain royally, went down South. He saw the need of a subtreasury, not for the benefit of the Government possibly, but for the benefit of the commerce of this country, the people who after all in this great Republic are the Government.

Now, then, suppose a subtreasury had been established at Birmingham, where he agreed to establish it, or at Atlanta, which fought so vigorously for it. The people in that section of the country, if they must pay the freight-I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], who is close to the doors of Chicago-could get the silver at less freight than sending away off to Philadelphia, or to Baltimore, or to the city of Washington, or to Cincinnati, or to St. Louis. As it is, we have no subtreasury where they can even get cheap freight rates to haul these dollars to the people that want to transact their business with them.

Now, then, there is the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] who frequents—and I am glad he does—the He has been a great friend, I know, for years in this House of the southern people, their institutions, their wants, and their petitions. I bear personal witness to the fact. to establish a subtreasury in the South. Why? Not because the Government, as such, needed it, but because the people of that country want it, people who are entitled to some of the conveniences and to some of the pleasures of not being oppressed. They have protested against the highway robbery imposed by the express companies, that great monster that has been robbing the Government and robbing the people. In face of this want and this robbery the people ask this pittance, and yet it is denied.

Another distinguished son of Ohio [Mr. Keifer] favors this appropriation. The laboring people of the South, the negroes of the South, who believe in the silver dollar and want that and nothing else, and the white people of the South and the people of the West want it. And yet in this day of liberal appropriations to do this, that, and the other the commerce of the country is to be curtailed, the people are to be denied the money they want and that they are entitled to have because express companies charge too much for hauling it. And yet the committee comes along and omits the usual appropriation, and now, I believe, goes a step further in this bill and says that if the bank puts so much money in the treasury or treasuries the Government will haul the small silver coins only. How can they do so in Nashville? There is no treasury or subtreasury there. How can they do it in Memphis? There are none there. How can they do it in Atlanta? There are none there. How can they do so in Florida? There are none there. How in Alabama? There are none there. How in Louisiana? There are none there. How in Arkansas? None there. How in the Middle West? None there. Where are we going to find a treasury or subtreasury in these sections South and West, I will ask my friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]? There are no treasury conveniences there. And yet you would have the people, before they could get the benefits of the hauling of even these little silver coins, put them in a place that the gentleman himself knows does not exist in these sections, thus requiring them to meet an impossible condition and without the people's fault.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman who has made the objection to letting this paragraph go over withdraws his objection. I renew the motion that it go over.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines] yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer]?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].
Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the motion that it go over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the paragraph go over without prejudice until to-morrow, and that his amendment be pending when the paragraph is again called Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I now suggest, but in no dilatory spirit, but because my eyes seem to convince me, that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of no quorum. Does the gentleman state that he does this sincerely and not in a dilatory spirit?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say it because after an effort to count the membership present I can not count a quorum.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to say that there is a quorum, not on the floor, but that the gentlemen are down in the restaurant getting their dinners.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I never yet heard the quorum in the restaurant being counted.

Mr. TAWNEY. And we will have a quorum inside of five minutes Mr. WILLIAMS. They ought to be here to listen to this bill.

and listen to what is going on, if they are in the restaurant now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman says he makes the motion in sincerity and not in a dilatory spirit, so the Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair has counted 104 gentlemen; a quorum is present. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General inspector of supplies for public buildings: For one general inspector, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who may be required to inspect public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, and report on the efficiency of the custodians' forces, and the use of fuel, lights, water, miscellaneous supplies, and so forth, $3.000; and for actual necessary traveling expenses, not exceeding $2,000; in all, $5,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I reserve the point of order on the section last read. I reserve it from the fact that on the face it seems that the point of order ought to be good. It is on page 50, for inspector.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. PERKINS. The point of order is that it is new legislation, and the reason I make it, I will state to the gentleman from Minnesota, is this: Here is a provision that, Mr. Chairman, provides for a general inspector to be appointed by the President to inspect public buildings, to ascertain in reference to the custodians' force, the use of fuel, light, water, etc., at an expense not to exceed $5,000. Now, the next paragraph in the bill authorizes the employment of another person to inspect public buildings, to examine into their requirements for furniture and other furnishings, including fuel, light, personal service, at an expense of $5,500 a year. So far as I am able to see, Mr. Chairman, it would appear on its face; apparently and avowedly, it is not in order, if he is to be appointed by the President. Then we have two sections providing for the employment of two Government employees whose duties are almost exactly identical. I reserve the point of order in order that the gentleman in charge of the bill may tell us something about this provision. On the face of it it is a double provision for the same work

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the gentleman from New York is mistaken about that. The duties of the first position relate entirely to inspecting buildings and the appliances; the other relates more especially to the inspection of furniture, supplies, etc. will say, further, Mr. Chairman, that when the sundry civil bill in the last session of Congress was reported the first item was omitted entirely. I do not pretend to defend it, although we have tried to put it in a shape so that part of the duty here-tofore performed by the man under the second paragraph shall be put on the man who is appointed under the first paragraph, and hope to make the place of some use to the Government. The item has been carried for a great many years in the sundry civil bill. It has been knocked out in the House; it has been omitted when reported from the committee; but it always comes back with that item, and the conferees on the part of the House have never yet been able to keep that item out

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to inquire why one inspector can not do both things?

Mr. PERKINS. That is just what I wanted to know. Mr. TAWNEY. One, the inspector of furniture, does not in-Mr. TAWNEY. One, the inspector of furniture, does not inspect the furniture in the buildings. He is at the factory where the furniture is manufactured. Of course one inspector can not do this. It is impossible, I will say, for one inspector to inspect all the Government buildings in this country. It can not be done with one man. There is, in addition to this, a further inspection force in the Department, under the Supervising Architect; but this man has a roving commission, and is under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and is the only employee of the Government receiving a salary such as he does whose appointment must be confirmed by the Senate of the United States

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to inquire why it is—
The CHAIRMAN. The discussion is proceeding in the time of

The CHARMAN. The discussion is proceeding in the time of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I so understand. I would like to inquire why it is that he is to report on the efficiency of the custodian's force. There is only one that has power to do that all over the country. The second man does not have any such I assume that one of the men will travel all over the United States inspecting. Now, while he is traveling, why not inspect the others?

Mr. TAWNEY. He could, and he should.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the chairman of the committee agrees with me in the construction put on the paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think the paragraph is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What authority of law is there for it? Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Nothing except in the annual appropriation bills

Mr. TAWNEY. It is an established service, provided for in the appropriations of previous Congresses, and for a great many years.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that the gentleman in charge of the bill concedes that this point of order has been sustained. Furthermore, let me call attention to the fact that in this section additional duties are imposed, which in itself is new legislation, even if the other were not, and therefore the entire section is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of special authorization, which has not been produced, the Chair is clearly of the opinion that it is obnoxious to the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is, to the first paragraph.
Mr. PERKINS. I only made it to the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The one to which the point of order was

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the point of order was made only to the first paragraph.

Mr. PERKINS. Beginning at line 18, page 50, and ending at line 2, page 51.

The CHAIRMAN. As to that paragraph, the point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inspector of furniture and other furnishings for public buildings: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to employ a suitable person to inspect all public buildings and examine into their requirements for furniture and other furnishings, including fuel, lights, personal services, and other current expenses, $2,500; and for actual necessary traveling expenses, including actual traveling expenses of assistant, not exceeding $3,000; in all, $5,500.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make the point of order against the paragraph just read, from line 3 down to and including line 11, on page 51

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lattlefield). The Chair understands that this is situated precisely as the other paragraph was with reference to the point of new legislation. Mr. TAWNEY. No; the situation is not the same, Mr. Chair-This is an office made necessary by reason of the service incident to the inspection of furniture and furnishings for public buildings which are constructed in accordance with law

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an office created by law, other than the annual appropriation bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it is.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assistant inspector of furniture and other furnishings for public buildings, $1,600.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make the point of order against lines 12 and 13, on page 51.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the chairman of the committee whether it is subject to the same legal construction?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is. The CHAIRMAN. T The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Furniture and repairs of furniture: For furniture and repairs of same, carpets, and gas and electric-light fixtures for all public buildings, exclusive of marine hospitals, mints, branch mints, and assay offices, under the control of the Treasury Department, and for furniture, carpets, gas and electric-light fixtures for new buildings, exclusive of personal services, except for work done by contract, $352,500. And all furniture now owned by the United States in other public buildings and in buildings rented by the United States shall be used, so far as practicable, whether it corresponds with the present regulation plan for furniture or not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. How did the committee arrive at the conclusion that it would take $352,500 to do this particular thing?

Mr. TAWNEY. This is an appropriation for the furnishing of new public buildings, and the appropriation for the furnishing of new public buildings, and the appropriation is made upon a careful estimate of the Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You have an itemized account somewhere, have you?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not say that we have the statements specifically itemized, but we had the Supervising Architect before us and he gave us this information:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is on page S8, "Furniture and repairs of furniture," and I observe that the estimate for 1908 is $352,500, as against $495,400.

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. A material reduction in the appropriation?
Mr. LUDLOW. Yes, sir: we have been informed by the Supervising Architect's office that there will be only two buildings that will be furnished this year, and those are the buildings at Baltimore and Southle.

Seattle.

The Chairman. Only two buildings to be furnished this year?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. In the fiscal year 1908?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes, sir; that is all we have an estimate for. There will be eight buildings, but I did not change the estimate.

The Chief Clerk of the Treasury Department is the man who has supervision of the purchase of furniture, and also of the repairs to furniture, and it is upon the information that he furnishes in regard to the matter that we have made this recommendation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read,

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as 1010ws:

Fuel, lights, and water for public buildings: For the purchase of fuel, steam, light, water, water meters, ice, lighting supplies, electric current for light and power purposes, and miscellaneous items for the use of the custodian's forces in the care of the buildings, furniture, and heating, hoisting, and ventilating apparatus, and electric-light plants, exclusive of personal service, and for expenses of installing electric-light plants, electric-light wiring, and repairs thereto, in such buildings completed and occupied as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, for all public buildings, exclusive of marine hospitals, mints, branch mints, and assay offices, under the control of the Treasury Department, inclusive of new buildings, $1,350,000. And the appropriation herein made for gas shall include the rental and use of gas governors, when ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury in writing:

Provided. That no sum shall be paid as rental for such gas governors greater than 35 per cent of the actual value of the gas saved thereby, which saving shall be determined by such tests as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct. No portion of the amount herein appropriated shall be used for operating a system of pneumatic tubes for the transmission of postal matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the last sentence. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what is the purpose of making a positive statement here that no portion of the amount appropriated shall be used for operating a system of pneumatic tubes for the transmission of postal

Mr. TAWNEY. The purpose of this is to prevent the making of contracts for pneumatic-tube service that properly belongs to the Post-Office Department. That should be made out of the post-office appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I thought that possibly the Department might conclude, when putting in conduits for other things, to put in a conduit for pneumatic-tube service. Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the committee has recommended to the House a provision authorizing an investigation of the advisability of a pneumatic-tube service between the Capitol and the Government Printing Office and other Departments and to report at the next session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order. Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the gentleman's point of order? Mr. CLARK of Florida. That it is new legislation, as I understand it

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not new legislation; it is a limitation upon the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Littlefield). Does the gentleman from Florida wish to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it is a limitation, and overrules the point of order.
The Clerk read as follows:

Hen and Chickens light vessel, Buzzards Bay, Massachusetts: For completing the construction, equipping, and outfitting complete for servece, a steel, steam, self-propelling light vessel, with a steam fog signal,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "Hen and Chickens." The authorization is for a light vessel at the entrance to Buzzards Bay to take the place of the Hen and Chickens light vessel. It might not be located at that exact

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I see no objection, Mr. Chairman, to the proposed amendment, but I want to say that the language of the item is that proposed by the Department.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Milwaukee breakwater and harbor of refuge, Wisconsin: For establishing a light and fog signal on the Milwaukee breakwater, Lake Michigan, Wisconsin, $50,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "dollars," in line 17, page 61, the following: "Provided, That this amount and that hereafter appropriated and the authorization to contract therefor is hereby made available, applicable, and in force for the establishment of said light and fog-signal station on the south end of the proposed extension of the breakwater, harbor of refuge."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if establishing a light and fog-signal station on the Milwaukee breakwater, Lake Michigan, is for the initial establishment of that station?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was authorized by the act of Congress last year.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Authorized by existing law? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes. If the gentleman had observed the language of the amendment just adopted be would see that it slightly changes this location.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I gathered from the reading of the amendment that there had been some legislation on the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It has been authorized.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reason for the amendment is a provision in this year's river and harbor bill extending the breakwater a thousand feet southerly. This light and fog-signal sta-tion was authorized last year to be located on the present southerly end of the breakwater. The location having been defined, and a change in the breakwater and the site of the proposed light having been decided upon, it is necessary to make available and effective the authorization and the appropriation for the new site that this amendment be adopted, else the light would not be erected, as the present end of the breakwater would be entirely unsuitable to the needs of navigation after it will be extended 1,000 feet. No more money will be needed by virtue of the changed location, merely a new site made necessary by the extension of the breakwater.

The Clerk read as follows:

Martins Reef light vessel, northwestern end of Lake Michigan, Michigan: For completing the construction, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, of a steel, steam self-propelling light vessel, with a steam fog signal, $20,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 62, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "steel, steam self-propelling;" and before the word "fog," strike out the word "steam."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the reason of this is that since the estimates came in some information has come to the Light-House Board which I think renders this necessary. This is for a light vessel which costs $45,000, much less than the usual light vessel would cost. There is already an appropriation for a light vessel on the Lakes that is to cost $60,000, and it was provided in that act that it should be a steam vessel. The Light-House Board recently called the attention of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the fact that they might want to substitute some other motive power, and we included in the bill that has passed Congress as to the other vessels the authority to substitute some other motive power, and this would leave it in their discretion, as it left in the original authoriza-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of office force: For one disbursing agent, $2,500.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. What about this disbursing agent? What necessity is there for a disbursing agent in every separate division in every Department of the Government? What is the reason that they can not keep the accounts in the Treasury?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Well, as I understand that work, this branch of the service is entirely away from the departmental buildings, where it constitutes in effect a separate and distinct office. It is quite customary to have a separate disbursing branch of this kind, and this has long existed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much money does this Geodetic Survey, or whatever it is, expend altogether—the sum total of it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. About a million dollars a year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The other day in some bill they provided for a disbursing agent to disburse $75,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would regard that as a very liberal allowance, to allow a disbursing agent for that amount of Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It would not take me very long to disburse $75,000 myself, if I had it. I do not see much sense in this business.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inquiry respecting food-fishes: For expenses of the inquiry into the causes of the decrease of food-fishes in the lakes, rivers, and coast waters of the United States, and for the study of the waters of the interior, the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts in the interest of fish culture and the commercial fisheries, expenses of travel and preparation of reports, and for all other necessary expenses in connection therewith, $20,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 88, line 8, strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state that this restores the appropriation that has been heretofore appropriated for this particular branch of the service and has been carried for many Since the bill has been reported to the House the comvears. mittee has had information which has led the committee in charge of this bill to believe it was necessary to restore the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act: To prevent unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, and for expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, $500,000, which shall be paid from the permanent appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration, and of said sum $1,000 per annum shall be paid to the Commissioner-General of Immigration as additional compensation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Last year, Mr. Chairman, it was disclosed that orders had been given to the Commissioner-General of Immigration not to be particularly active in the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he has any knowledge as to whether that order has been withdrawn?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not understand the order the gentleman refers to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Last year it was made known that the Commissioner of Immigration had been instructed not to be particularly active in the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act. That was very apparent from the hearings.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman from New York that the subcommittee did not go into the question at all at this session as to the enforcement or nonenforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act. I have no information at all as to what has been done since the hearings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assume it was not because the gentleman feared that perhaps the same situation might be disclosed. Mr. TAWNEY. No; it was not because of any fears, but for lack of time.

seemed a very extraordinary thing that any official should be instructed not to enforce the law. Mr. FITZGERALD. At that time the gentleman recollects it

Mr. TAWNEY. As I now recall, the Commissioner of Immigration, when before the committee a year ago, did not state he had been instructed not to enforce it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was not to make himself particularly obnoxious by deporting the Chinamen who were apprehended, and he admitted he had acted upon the suggestion. I have not had the chance to look at the hearings on the question.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is nothing in the hearings on the subject at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," namely: For chief of division of naturalization, $3,000; assistant chief of division, $2,500; two clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; four clerks, at $1,000 each; two copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and for rent, $4,000; in all, $36,460. each; one mess in all, $36,460.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk had not concluded reading the paragraph.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I thought the Clerk had finished reading the paragraph which ends on line 2, page 91. I desire to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to call attention to the paragraph in regard to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman, because he was seeking recognition. Does the gentleman move to strike out the last word?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes; I move to strike out the last word. I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the com-Was it not the purpose, I would like to ask the chairman, to offer an amendment to this paragraph to restore the salary of the Chief of the Division of Naturalization to $3,500 instead of $3,000? I had supposed an amendment would be offered to that effect.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no objection to the amendment, Since the bill has been reported the Commissioner-General of Immigration has called my attention and the attention of other members of the committee to the fact that this division chief is now performing some very important service. He is a very capable man, and I have no objection to the gentleman from Massachusetts, if he desires, offering an amendment increasing the salary to $3,500.

I want to know if the gentleman's under-Mr. SULLIVAN. standing of the case is the same as mine; that is to say, that the work of this division is of such importance that it requires a very competent man and that the particular chief is a very competent man and is actually worth $3,500? The Immigration Commissioner, who is the superior of this division chief, recommends that he receive $3,500.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think that is the fact. The work is per-haps more important there now because the division is going through a formative period at present, and the salary which he is receiving under the lump-sum appropriation is $3,600, but I would not consent to making it $3,000 in the case of this chief of division, because it would be a greater salary than that paid to any other chief of division in the public service.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and offer another amendment, in line 19, page 90, insert the word "five" after the word "thousand" and before the word "dollars;" so as to read "$3,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19, page 20, after the word "thousand" insert "five hundred;" so as to read " $$3,\!500."$

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make it or reserve it? Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make it.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard on the point? Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to have the gentleman from Florida be heard as to the grounds upon which he makes his point of order. Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is either an increase of salary, or is a new salary. Mr. TAWNEY. The point of order comes too late. There has been an amendment offered and debate has already been had on the paragraph.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TAWNEY. The point of order does not lie even against the amendment to the paragraph after it has been debated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] offered an amendment to this paragraph, and that the

Mr. TAWNEY. He offers an amendment which increases the salary of the chief of this division. The item itself is subject

The CHAIRMAN. The Clair thinks so.

Mr. TAWNEY. But a point of order was not made. Debate had been had on this particular item on the pro forma amendment, and amendment had been offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The suggestion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is correct, that the paragraph is subject to the point of order.

The paragraph is subject to the point of Mr. TAWNEY.

order, because this item is not a statutory position.

The CHAIRMAN. That had not been suggested before, and if the gentleman insists that it is subject to a point of order, then the point of order of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] against the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] does not lie and is not well taken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr.

Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts were adopted or defeated, it does not make any difference which, then has not the gentleman from Florida the right-

The CHAIRMAN. Not at this time, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark], because debate has been had on the paragraph, and the point of order comes too late.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose somebody would hop up here and commence debating a paragraph before the fellow that wanted to offer a point of order had a chance to get it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order must also be ready to

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That would resolve itself simply into an activity of the legs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that every presiding officer will give ample opportunity for any Member to reserve the point of order or to make it; but considerable discussion was had on this paragraph before the gentleman from Massachusetts had offered his amendment, and it was not until then that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] sought to raise the point of order. Much debate had been had on the paragraph itself before a point of order was raised, and it is a well-known rule that where the paragraph itself is obnoxious to the rule the point of order will not lie on an amendment which is obnoxious also. Therefore the Chair overruled the point of order made by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark].

The gentleman from Massachusetts moved to strike out the last word and much debate was had on the original paragraph before he withdrew the pro forma amendment and offered the other amendment. The other amendment, even though it be out of order, is made to a paragraph which of itself is out of order. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK]. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment. Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, the officer in this case, while performing other duties, was in receipt of $3,000 per year, and now the adoption of this amendment will result in giving him $3,500 a year, which is the largest he could receive as chief of division—that is to say, comparing it with other chiefs of division. The gentleman himself is a lawyer and he is about to inaugurate this new system which has been created under the law passed last year establishing a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization. There is no question but that the service demands a man capable of earning this salary, and this man is one entirely competent to earn the salary. on its merits it is a proposition the House ought to adopt.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I now make the point of order to the paragraph as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph has not yet been amended. Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understood the chairman of the committee to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not so understood. The Chair is about to put the question. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph as amended.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that that point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota that the point of order made by the gentleman from Florida comes too late.

The Clerk read as follows:

Census Office: To carry out under the Census Office the provisions of the act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report upon the industrial, social, moral, educational, and physical condition of woman and child workers in the United States, approved January 29, 1907, $150,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to move an amendment to the paragraph, by striking out the words "Census Office," in lines 9 and 10, on page 91, and inserting in lieu thereof "Bureau of Labor;" and also strike out the subtitle "Census Office" and insert "Bureau of Labor."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 strike out "Census Office" and insert "Bureau of Labor;" and at the end of line 9, and beginning of line 10, strike out "Census Office" and insert "Bureau of Labor."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment may take some little time in its consideration, and I would like to have it carried over. I ask, therefore, unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the pending paragraph be passed without prejudice.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida sees fit to object. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five min-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This is quite an important proposition. A month or two ago Congress passed a law authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to make an exhaustive investigation into the industrial, social, moral, and physical condition of woman and child workers in the United States. The investigation is one of a great deal of importance—one that has excited much interest throughout the country-and the investigation ought to be thoroughly made. It ought to be made by the Bureau of the Government that is particularly identified with the subject of labor. The investigation is not statistical or economic; it is rather a sociological, a moral investigation. It contemplates the investigation of the sanitary and the moral and the physical conditions of women and children in the fac-tories and the mines of the country. The Census Office is not adapted to that kind of investigation. The Census Office is essentially a statistical office. It makes census investigations, census examinations, and reports its conclusions. They are colorless in that they are absolutely free from recommendation, free from bias, and they are valuable only for those who have use for statistics. Now, the labor organizations of the country are insisting that this investigation shall be made by the Bureau of Labor. The President of the United States, my recollection is, some few months ago—I think perhaps during the last term of Congress-addressed a special message to the Congress, asking that this investigation be authorized, and that it be made by the Bureau of Labor because of the fact that the Bureau of Labor is in sympathy with labor.

Mr. TAWNEY. If this will be of any service to the gentleman, I would suggest that he read the letter of the President, recommending that this investigation be made by the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I thank the gentleman. I had not read the letter published in this evening's paper. It is a letter addressed to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; and, Mr. Chairman, I will send the letter to the Clerk's desk and have it read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 20, 1907.

MY DEAR Mr. STRAUS: The investigation into the conditions of woman and child labor should. In my judgment, unquestionably be made by the Bureau of Labor. This is not merely a statistical investigation, If it were, it would be eminently proper to have the Census Bureau conduct it; but as it is, the Census Bureau strongly objects to undertaking the work. Director North has protested before the committee dealing with the sundry civil appropriation bill against having to undertake this work, saying that he did not regard himself as in any way competent to carry on the work because of its being of a kind in which he had no experience whatever, adding: "It is a kind of work which is foreign to the whole theory of a census office, and it belongs to the Bureau of Labor." In short, to intrust the work to the Census office instead of to the Bureau of Labor is to frustrate the entire purpose of undertaking the investigation. The proposed investigation is to bear fruit in legislation, if possible, by the National Congress: if not, then by the State legislatures, in consequence of the publication of the facts produced by the Bureau of Labor—always provided, of course, that the investigation shows the necessity of any legislation whatever.

PRAISES LABOR BUREAU.

I can not too strongly state that, in my judgment, the investigation will be shorn of a very large part of the good results we have a right to expect from it if it is not confided to the Bureau of Labor. Matters concerning labor conditions should properly be investigated by the Bureau of Labor. Any effort to minimize the functions of the Bureau by taking away from it these investigations should not succeed, especially when the real objection to the Bureau is that it has done the work allotted to it in first-rate shape; as, for instanse, in the case of the packing-house investigation last spring. It seems to me inadvisable, for every reason, to penalize the Bureau of Labor for the excellent investigations it has made—as, for instance, in this packing-house matter—by taking away from it the right to make such investigations in the future. The Bureau was organized to advance the legitimate interests of labor. I would not for one moment tolerate its acting in a demagogic spirit or its failing to pay just as much heed to the rights and interests of the capitalist who is acting decently as to those of the wage-worker who is acting decently; but I have not seen the slightest symptom of any dereliction of duty by the Bureau or its Chief, Mr. Neill, and it does not seem wise to give the impression that we are penalizing the Bureau because it has in proper fashion sought to represent the labor interests of the country.

Sincerely, yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Sincerely, yours, The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida objects. Mr. CRUMPACKER. I move to strike out the last word. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last word, and is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a statement made by the Director of the Census in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations on this particular proposition. Commissioner North said:

The work which the Census Office has published in this bulletin-That is, the recent bulletin upon child labor, a statistical bulletin, of great interest and value, recently published by the Census

Office—

The work which the Census Office has published in this bulletin, and is about to publish in the bulletin regarding women, completes the investigation of this subject so far as the census methods are concerned. You can readily understand that I mean by that that the census method deals only with the statistics on any given subject and presents its reports without drawing conclusions as to what ought to be done; and the value of a census report depends, in my judgment, upon the success of the compilation in making it absolutely colorless, so far as the expression of any political or religious or any other judgment in regard to what those figures show is concerned. They can only be analyzed from the economic and statistical point of view, if the Census Office is to command the confidence of people of all opinions.

Mr. North further says:

Mr. North further says:

I am speaking about the Census Office, Mr. Chairman. The Department of Labor, or the Bureau of Labor, is, as I understand it, a bureau established for investigating and reporting upon the welfare of employees of the laboring classes of this country, and the method of that Bureau is partly statistical and partly intensive, as the word has been used. They do go into many phases of investigation which are foreign to census work. They would go into a mine and report the conditions, the atmosphere, the temperature, and other conditions of health, which prevail in that mine.

Mr. TAYLOR. The physical situation.

Mr. NORTH. Yes; and those are phases of work with which the Census Office has nothing to do.

Mr. TAYLOR. And ought not to have anything to do with.

Mr. NORTH. And ought not to have anything to do with. And that is, as I understand it, the phase of this investigation of women and child labor which remains to be done in addition to the publication of these two census bulletins, and it is a phase of the question with which we have nothing to do. Therefore, since we have completed our share of the work, I regret to see that the Census Office has been included in the law just enacted on the subject of women and child labor.

In the law authorizing this investigation it was provided that the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor might utilize the Census Office in making the investigation, and the Director regrets that the Census Office is connected with the subject at all. Further:

The CHAIRMAN. Nevertheless it would be entirely competent for Congress, under this law, and for this committee, in recommending an appropriation for this investigation, to confine it exclusively to your Burean, would it not?

Mr. North. Congress has power to do almost anything.

The CHAIRMAN. If it did, you have the organization now with which to make the investigation, have you not?

Mr. North. We have, undoubtedly.

The CHAIRMAN and it does not involve or necessitate the forming of a new organization. You have your organization perfectly formed, and you can work under your present plan and go on with the investigation?

and you can work under your present plan and go on with the investigation?

Mr. North. I do not regard myself as in any way competent to direct it, Mr. Chairman, because it is a kind of work with which I have had no experience whatever. It is a kind of work which is foreign to the whole theory of a census office, and it belongs to the Bureau of Labor

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, if we are to make an investigation of this subject at all, we ought to make an investigation that will be worth something to the country, and the investigation ought to be made under the direction of one who is personally familiar with the subject and who knows the character of investigation that the subject demands. We are not making this investigation simply for the purpose of investigating; we are making it for the purpose of obtaining valuable information in order that the States throughout the country may be advised, so as to direct legislation along proper lines and protect women and children from imposition and abuse in the industries.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I quite agree with you and indorse what you say. I would make it complete, and I am anxious about it. I believe the women and children are suffering; but where have we the power to make a complete investi-I have asked you that question once before, and I know you conceded-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman asked me that question when the original bill was up in the House for consideration.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; I remember I did.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And I said to him that I did not believe there was any constitutional authority for the investigation; but it is in line with numerous other investigations that the Federal Government is conducting at this time. Now, after that bill was up in the House, the Committee on the Judiciary gave an opinion upon the power of Congress to legislate in relation to women and children in industries, and in that opinion the committee declared that Congress had no power to legislate, but that it did have authority to investigate the subject. I think the investigation is peculiarly important and ought to be made by the Federal Government, because all of the facts in all of the States can be collected and coordinated into something like a systematic whole and they can be of use to the

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I remember I asked the gentleman this question—and I have been away ill, as the gentleman knows, and do not know what the committee has done or what it has reported on in this matter-if a manufacturer (I believe I said a cotton manufacturer) should shut his door in the face of a Government officer, what authority would that Government officer have to make him open that door and to get all the facts about the women and the children who were working in that factory

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My personal judgment is that he would have no legal authority to compel him to do it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then how can he make a complete report?

in the many investigations in which the Government has been engaged where a manufacturer has refused to answer proper questions, in a proper investigation, in relation to his business.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will yield three minutes of that time to the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman had not finished his speech when I interrupted him and took his time

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, in relation to the right or the power to make this investigation, I simply repeat what I said to the gentleman before, that there is no constitutional authority that I know of for making the investigation, but the force of universal public opinion is so strong that no manufacturer, no proprietor of any industry, could afford to refuse a Government officer information or refuse to answer proper questions on the subject of his employees.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How does the Bureau of Labor make its investigation? You know they give us books full of figures

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Under authority that is conferred by the same kind of law. The information is voluntary, and I repeat that no proprietor of any industry has ever refused to give information. It is all voluntary. All of our statistical investi-gations and information is based upon the same authority. If there is no authority to make this investigation, there is no authority to make any investigation. All of this information is voluntary except the statistical information of population for the purpose of apportioning representation and a capitation tax. I do not think there will be any trouble at all in securing correct data or in making a thorough and correct investigation of the subject, and I do think that the whole investigation ought to be under the control of the Bureau of Labor.
Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. TAWNEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Chair is inclined to recognize some one in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. TAWNEY. I rose for that purpose, Mr. Chairman, and addressed the Chair before anyone

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in consideration of this question in the committee we have presented to us this situation: Congress has specifically authorized the investigation into the condition of woman and child labor in this country. Congress, in its wisdom, vested in the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the discretion of having that investigation made under one of three different agencies, or under two of the three combined. He may utilize the Bureau of Labor or the Census Bureau, and then there is something that I do not think any Member of this House knew at the time that we passed the bill-that the law contained language that the Department has construed vests in the head of the Department the power of employing outside agents for the purpose of conducting this intense investigation, as it is called.

Now, it is impracticable to attempt to have this investigation conducted by two bureaus. I do not think it ought to be the policy of Congress to invest the discretion or power to make this investigation in any outside agency. Therefore, as a matter of policy—and it is for Congress to determine the policy under which the new law is to be carried out, making the provision, we have not only the power, but it is our duty to do it—it is impracticable to place that investigation under both the Department of Labor and the Census Bureau. Therefore we selected the Census Bureau, notwithstanding the statement made by the Director of the Census that it does not properly belong to his Bureau. Congress has said that it can be placed under this Bureau. It to-day has an organization, an army of inspectors who are traveling over the country investigating manufacturing establishments. Therefore the investigation by his own men into the conditions of female and child labor employed in these factories comes properly under the jurisdiction of these men and under the Bureau of the Census. True, it is not statistical, but that does not make it impossible for the representatives of the Bureau of the Census to gather the information which the law says shall be gathered or may be gathered in the Bureau of the Census.

Another reason that actuated the committee is the fact that to-day the Census Bureau has all the data in its office respecting the employment of women in this country, except the physical conditions surrounding their employment. Only recently the Bureau of the Census issued a bulletin on child labor, which Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then how can he make a com-lete report?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is the moral power.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I grant you that.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know of any single instance on the farm. In view of the fact that they have this statistical information, in view of the fact that they have a force of agents out in the field now gathering statistics concerning manufacturing industries, it was the judgment of your committee that this investigation can be done just as efficiently and done far more economically and with less intensity, perhaps, and less sensationalism, perhaps, than it would be done if it were done by agencies outside of the Government or if it were done by the other Bureau. For that reason we have made the recommendation we have, that this investigation be conducted by the

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. GROSVENOR: Is it not a fact that the Bureau of Labor, representing, as it does, labor organizations and the labor of the country, would be more inclined to be partisan in the taking of these facts and making this report than an independent bureau that is in no wise connected with labor?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think so. I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is in the interests of the women and children who are employed in the factories of this country to have an impartial, fair, and candid investigation made—one that will disclose the facts without the intensity with which the Director of the Bureau of the Census says it is the purpose to make this investi-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to make this suggestion, that it seems to me that this being purely a labor problem, the investigation ought to be made by the Labor Bureau.

Mr. TAWNEY. But it is not a labor proposition. problem at all affecting labor. It is a social and physical condition surrounding the employment of certain people, and all that is necessary on the part of the man charged with the responsibility of making this investigation is to exercise the intelligence which God Almighty gave him, and he will be able to make an investigation as the law contemplates it should be

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, it is true that this is a social problem, a problem of suffering, and a problem to some of something worse than that, because it not only kills the little child that is working at an unripe and immature age, intellectually and physically, but it renders those children unfit to become the progenitors of the next generation. is nothing under the sun that is so saddening to the heart, even of an ordinary man of the world not easily saddened, as to see these poor little listless, vacant-eyed working children sitting around inanely in what ought to be their playtime. But it is a labor problem after all-labor performed by those who ought not to be compelled to labor.

I understand, of course, that the Federal Government has no jurisdiction to correct these ills. All that is purported to be done is to present to the country—to the citizens of the several States-a picture of the evil as it really exists, and in that way to arraign the conscience—the moral consciousness—of the citizens of the several States, and thus have them remedied in the proper forum—the State legislatures—whatever evils may exist. The gentleman has given as a reason why the work should go to the Census Bureau that the Census Bureau would report nothing but the age and the number and the hours-the age of the children and the number of them and the hours of work to be performed by them—the cold statistical facts, in a word.

Mr. TAWNEY. I made no such statement as that. I know the gentleman does not wish to misquote me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I am not trying to quote the gentleman literally.

Mr. TAWNEY. But I made no such statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the gentleman made the statement that one reason why the Census Bureau ought to be charged with the investigation was because it would be cold, impartial, statistical statement, if I understood him.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not say statistical, because the Census Bureau now has all the statistical information that can be obtained. I said it would be an impartial report as to the physical conditions surrounding the employment of these people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Everybody wants an impartial report. In other words, everybody wants a truthful report.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And every truthful report will be impartial, but I do not conceive that it is an objection to lodging this power in the Labor Bureau that the Labor Bureau would report something more than the bare, cold, statistical facts, but might report the condition of suffering that exists, the condition of wearing away the young child's life before it has become hardly a life at all.

We want to know the things that would be well to be known, in order to bring about a reform everywhere in the country Now, I did not have where reform needs to be brought about. the happiness of sitting upon the committee and did not hear the facts as the members of the committee did, and I may be totally wrong about this, but it does seem to me that, being a labor problem, affecting the laboring men not of this generation alone, but of the next, because the children of the poor of this generation are the fathers and mothers of the labor of the next, the investigation ought to go to the Labor Bureau.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think if the committee is informed of the facts, there will not be much misunderstanding nor difficulty in settling this question. I have in my hand a report just issued by the Census Bureau on child labor in the United States, and gentlemen can see it is a somewhat bulky report and contains some 200 pages of printed matter. It contains the information which the Bureau was directed to compile in the act directing the taking of the Twelfth Census. directed that in the taking of the Twelfth Census the enumerators should report the occupation of every child 10 years of age and over who was "earning money regularly by labor, contributing to the family support, or appreciably assisting in mechanical or agricultural industry." That is all the Bureau of Census undertook to do. It has done that much, as is apparent from this report, and it is clear that, despite the protest of the Director of the Census, his Bureau is well equipped to obtain and compile the information it is directed to compile by Congress by this provison, and that it can do it in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. CRUMPACKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The investigation he has used as the basis for the recent bulletin issued by the Census Office was The gentleman has in mind, no taken seven years ago. doubt-

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not so sure it was taken-yes; the report states it is based on unpublished information derived from the schedules of the Twelfth Census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That they made up in 1900. Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And there have been labor laws enacted since then, and conditions may be materially different.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am simply exhibiting this document to the House to show that, despite the protest of the Director of the Census, his Bureau is competent to obtain whatever character of information he is directed to obtain by law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is purely statistical, however.
Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me to complete the statement I am trying to make, then perhaps he will be better satisfied. Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York how well equipped the Bureau of Labor is for the work that is proposed under this provision of the bill? Mr. FITZGERALD. My opinion is that the Bureau of Labor has no organization and no competent force to obtain information of any character.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit, I will say the Commissioner of Labor himself stated to me that if this was put under the Department of Labor they would have to organize their force entirely anew, and he would have to spend at least six months in going out all over the country to map out the plans of this investigation, so that the work would have to begin at the very foundation of the Bureau of Labor. have no inspectors for this purpose. They have only two inspectors in the Bureau of Labor, and the work would have to commence from the very beginning, whereas if it was carried on in the Bureau of the Census, they have an organization there now, an organization that keeps the head of the Bureau and the other officials busy trying to get appropriations to keep them in work until time to take the next census. Mr. FITZGERALD. The act under which it is proposed to make the investigation for which the appropriation is contained in this bill provides for the gathering of other and additional information.

It directs that a report upon the industrial, social, moral, educational, and physical conditions of woman and child workers in the United States be made. That imposes additional labor upon whoever undertakes the work to that imposed upon the Census Bureau in the Twelfth Census. It will have to be obtained by sending enumerators or special agents or inspectors to the places where the women and children are employed, and the information gathered in that way will be compiled and pub-lished. The Census Bureau has the force; the Labor Bureau has not the force. Now, I wish to say just a word regarding this evil.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York an additional question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Did the committee have an estimate as to how much money would be required to equip the Bureau of Labor for this work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No information, as far as I am informed.

The report upon which this document has been compiled shows that there were 1,750,178 children between the ages of 10 and 15 engaged in some kind of employment; 1,061,971 of those children were engaged in agricultural occupations, and it is not intended to investigate the condition of children so employed; 688,270 were in all other occupations. Of those, 310,826, or nearly one-half, were 15 years of age; 501,849, or over two-thirds, were 14 or 15 years of age, and 186,358 were between the ages of 10 and 13.

Of course, it must be borne in mind, and I desire to state, that there are no statistics compiled here, because the law did not contemplate it, of the number of children under 10 years of age so employed. But it seemed to the committee, with the information before it, that the Census Bureau, well equipped, with no desire to conceal anything, organized for the purpose of collecting all kinds of information of a similar character, could more economically and more efficiently do this work. There is no difference of opinion as to the desirability of preventing child and woman labor under well-known and abhorrent conditions. That question is not before us now. There is only to be determined whether one bureau or another shall collect certain information.

I wish to call attention to the very extraordinary letter which has been read here to-night. It is addressed by the President to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, but it really is intended for this House. It was issued or given to the public from the White House to-day. In it the President, departing from his hitherto known methods, has attempted to wave in a more direct and open manner the "big stick" and coerce this House into doing his will rather than to have it exercise its own will. He states in that letter that he would not permit the Bureau of Labor to act in a demagogic spirit in conducting this investigation, or tolerate its failing to see that the rights of capital would be equally guarded with those of the wage

Mr. Chairman, the rights of capitalists are not involved in this investigation. It is designed in order to obtain information regarding the condition of women and children engaged in labor under conditions universally condemned, and the best proof to my mind that the Bureau of Labor would not make an investigation and report that would be impartial and fair is the fact that the President feels it necessary to warn the House that he would not permit it to do anything that would be improper in He says that it would not be wise in his this investigation. opinion to give the impression that we are penalizing the Bureau

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes in which to finish his speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The President speaks of "we," giving the impression that "we" are penalizing the Bureau of Labor. Whom does he mean by "we?" I submit most respectfully that the legislative branch of the Government is the proper branch to determine at this time and upon this bill which particular bureau shall perform this particular work.

The President has his rights. He can communicate his views and opinions upon this matter in a proper or in a more orderly way to this House. If he be not satisfied with the bureau upon which Congress imposes this duty, he can refuse to permit the bureau that Congress will impose the work upon to perform it by vetoing the bill. So far as I am concerned, without any particular resentment against this attempt to shake the "big stick" in my face, I propose to act according to what I believe, with the information before the committee, the best interests of the Government and of the investigation itself. The committee has endeavored to impartially ascertain which particular bureau was best equipped to do this work-which bureau can do it most effectively, which bureau can do it most economically-which is a matter of some consequence, although it may not appeal to some people in other departments of the Government. tee has decided this question in favor of the Census Office. have the confidence that I know other members of this committee have in the integrity and efficiency of the Census Office, and I believe that this committee will give to that Office the work.

How easy it is to understand the protest of the Director of the Census against doing this work when he knew that the Chief Executive was determined to have some other bureau do it if he could have his way. I am not responsible for what the majority of this House will do. I do not know how susceptible it is to the influence of this stick when it is waved so emphatically over their heads; but I trust, for the sake of ourselves and for the dignity of the House, and in order to justify our right to legislate, that we will sustain the committee; that we will determine this question according to our own judgment and at the proper time let the President perform his duty in the manner he deems proper.

I had occasion last year to say that we were coming to that condition when Congress consisted no longer of the two Houses the Senate and the House of Representatives-but consisted of three Houses-the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the White House. I am inclined to review that opinion. If I were asked to give an opinion now as to what constituted Congress, in the light of this letter I would say that it would appear to consist of one House, and that House was the White House. I hope that this committee will emphatically stop legislation by coercion from the Executive, that it will exercise its own rights and judgment. For once at least let us act truly and without fear. If this investigation is to be conducted, let it be conducted where the work will unquestionably be fairly and impartially done, and whatever the report be it will be a report that will be received with confidence by the country, without the slightest ground for the belief that it has been colored to meet the particular desires or wishes of some person or group of persons.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paragraph be closed in ten minutes, five minutes to be given to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] and five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I believe I would like to have five minutes in this "shindy" myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the motion. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate be closed in ten minutes, five minutes to be given to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt]

Mr. JAMES. I move to amend that by making it fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet stated the question Five minutes to be given to the gentleman from Missouri | Mr. BARTHOLDT] and the other five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the committee.

Mr. JAMES. I move to amend by making it fifteen minutes, and let the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Stanley] have five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to close debate in fifteen minutes, five minutes to be given to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt], five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan], a member of the committee, and five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Stanley].

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry. I have no objection to the motion nor to asking unanimous consent, but I raise the point of order that in making a limit for debate you can not couple with it a distribution of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the point is well taken, and that it should be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that that proposition may be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I merely desire to call attention to the fact that the legislation for which this appropriation is made was passed here a few weeks ago. It was considered in the Committee of Labor, and if I remember right the bill provided that the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor should make this investigation.

I should like to know from my friend, the chairman of the committee, whether the Secretary of Commerce and Labor under this legislation has exercised his judgment in recommending the selection of either the Census Bureau or the Bureau of Labor to make this investigation?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or the Department of Commerce and Labor, has not indicated to the committee which of the two bureaus they would prefer to have this work done under, except in so far as the Director of the Census said he did not want it and the Commissioner of Labor said that he did want it. The head of the Department has not made any selection so far as the committee knows.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will state for the committee which considered this matter that we never contemplated this work to be done by the Census, because we believed that a Census official merely collects statistics, figures, facts; but he does not go into an investigation of the sociological and economic conditions of women and child workers.

Will the gentleman from Missouri permit an Mr. TAWNEY. interruption?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why, then, did you advocate the bill with this provision in it, giving express authority to the Department to have the work done by the Census Bureau?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The bill does not say so.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The bill does say so in express terms.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The bill leaves it discretionary with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor either to select the Bureau of Labor or the Census.

If it had been contemplated that this Mr. CRUMPACKER. work was to be done by the Census Office, the law never would have been enacted, because the Census Office has recently issued a bulletin on this identical subject, covering as large a scope as the Census Bureau is competent to do. It would be merely a

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I understood the gentleman to take the ground that this work was out of date.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Partly out of date.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. Investigations of this kind are being conducted by the Bureau of Labor all the year round, and into all kinds of branches of knowledge, and it comes clearly and particularly within the scope of the activities of that Bureau, and in my judgment and in the judgment of the members of the Committee on Labor, the work should be done by that Bureau and not by the census officials.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, the Director of the Census gave to the committee as his reason for not wishing to undertake this work that he has been engaged heretofore in the collection and compilation of statistics; that that work has received the careful scrutiny of political economists and statesmen, and has received their approval. He does not wish to have the value of his work impaired by a work such as this provision contemplates, because of his fear that he will be compelled to leave the region of fact and go to some extent at least into the region of deduction, if not into the realms of fancy. that very reason itself presents to the Congress the strongest motive for intrusting the duty of collecting the statistics upon this question to the Director of the Census, even against his personal wishes. The country does not wish to be thrilled each day or each week with a new sensation. The country would relish a calm, lucid, sober presentation of facts, if only for a The Bureau of the Census would give us that orderly and methodical statement which would furnish a solid foundation for legislative action much better indeed than the work of dreamers and poets, who would prefer to write fiction than to record facts.

Now, the Congress does not need to learn that there are children at work in the factories and mines of the country. We know that. It will always continue so long as human greed continues, unless the strong arm of the law intervenes. Child labor is no new thing, nor is it confined to the Southern or Western States. The State which I have the honor in part to represent had to grapple in its day with the problem of child labor, just as the men of England had to grapple in their day with the problem of child labor and the proper regulation of factories, their sanitation, and other conditions. Human greed causes some employers to make little children work. I regret to say that some of the men who fought most bitterly in the Massachusetts legislature against the reduction of the hours of labor in that State have sent their capital into the Southern States, and paid their lobbies to prevent the enactment of laws to reduce the hours of labor of women and children there.

Avarice is one of the motives which calls for this investigation. The Southern States and the Western States will have to solve this problem themselves. All that we can legally do is to present to the Congress information. Unless we are pre-pared to take away the reserved powers of the States we must leave the States themselves, through local legislatures, to deal with the hours of labor of women and children.

I know a gentleman in the other body has said that the report of the House Judiciary Committee is absurd and ridiculous, because it does not happen to agree with the labor. I wish wish that we could have laws regulating child labor. I wish wish that we could have laws regulating child labor. I wish I think it might operate to reduce the hours of labor and the length of speeches. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, we have heard it stated recently that if the States fail to exercise the power reserved to them under the Constitution, that a way will be found of having the National Government discharge the functions of the State. That proposition was submitted to us from a very high officer—a Cabinet minister in this Administration.

What is sought to be done now? A moral atmosphere is sought to be created by the presentation of a highly colored and dramatic report which may contain much truth and perhaps much that is not true, and that sensational report will be submitted to this Congress, and it will be confidently expected that Congress will be swept off its feet; that it will disregard its. constitutional limitations and will pass a law regulating labor in the States.

There is no question but that a report made by the Bureau of Labor would go a long way in that direction. Some gentlemen may say that Congress will not violate its oath. But let me point out to the Congress that only recently we passed, with hardly a dissenting vote, a law fixing the liability of interstate carriers to their employees, and that since that law was passed Federal judge has decided it to be unconstitutional.

[The time of Mr. Sullivan having expired, by unanimous consent, the time was extended five minutes.]

Now, I submit that there were many Members of this House when that law regulating the liability of interstate-commerce carriers to their employees was passed who must have felt when they voted for it that it would be declared unconstitutional; and I believe that history will repeat itself and that later a child-labor law may be submitted here, and that men in this body rather than stand up against the clamor created by men and women in this land will again vote for a measure which in their hearts they believe to be unconstitutional.

It is for the purpose of avoiding that situation that this work is sought to be intrusted to a bureau that will simply present the facts of the case. This is a question whether the facts shall be reported by a man of common sense without much imagination or by another agent of another bureau with a very fertile imagination. What the country needs is the facts and not the imagination of the gentlemen who are sent out to collect these

Now, I submit that the work can be better done by the Bureau of the Census; they are equipped for just this kind of work. submit that you can not collect statistics in a strict sense of moral and social conditions, but you can collect statistics from which deductions may be made which have a bearing upon moral and social conditions, and that is all we ask for.

The Census Bureau is equipped for that kind of work. Its report will be of great value to the country and will help the States to legislate upon this subject. Congress ought to decide this question, and I trust this House will decide it in the interest of good legislation here to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill emanated from the Committee on Labor. The great difficulty with those who were upon that committee and who were attempting as best they could to obtain that information which justified them in bringing that bill into this House was not so much a lack of figures, was not that we did not know how many women were employed in making their own living, how many children were to be found in field or factory, but in ascertaining the conditions under which they labored, the conditions that brought them there, and the result of their being there upon the future happiness and prosperity of the whole country. The gentleman from Massahusetts [Mr. Sullivan] has said that he wants nothing brought into this House in the way of a report, tabulated or otherwise, that shall disturb its fixed tranquillity. I pray the time may never come when there shall be a majority of this House who can see a woman in poverty and in rags driven to drudgery, and childhood robbed of everything save its helplessness, and turn from the scene tranquil as a column of figures or the page of a ledger

Mr. SULLIVAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentle-man does not imagine that I would ever with tranquillity view such a shocking condition as he depicts, and I also assert there was nothing in my statement which would give him the right to make any such assumption.

Mr. STANLEY. He would, as I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts, view one or two in that condition with emotion; but if the agent of this Government was called upon to describe the condition of an army of the miserable ones, he would want to rob him of sentiment and chain his fancy. want no prose poems here; we want, of course, no fanciful pictures; but I do not see by what foresight, I do not see by what gift of prophecy we can tell how fanciful the report will be be-fore it is received. This much we do know, that the Department of Commerce and Labor is prepared not only to give us the figures, but to investigate the conditions; to tell us not only how many women are engaged in manual labor in factories, in mills, or in mines, but what conditions made it necessary; what is the effect upon the women; what the effect upon society, for all that affects her who is to be wife or mother, morally, mentally, or physically, touches the base of the race and the future of the nation. [Applause.]

It will do us but very little good, Mr. Chairman, it will be of no benefit either to this House or to this country to be wisely and tranquilly and coolly and deliberately informed by the Bureau of the Census that there are so many children of such and such an age engaged in such and such work. Why, we know, and we knew one hundred years ago, that so many women were employed in the mines of Pittsfield, but it remained for indignant humanity to learn that those women labored with an iron chain between their limbs and a leather thong about their necks, that their bodies were torn and mangled, and that the hideous laceration resulting from drawing a coal cart through a subterranean passage ended in their degradation, deformity, and ruin.

We want to know more than the bare facts. I for one want a picture, if I can get it, sir, of the bowed form and the features pinched and drawn; I want the United States, I want this Congress, I want this world to know not only how many children are there, but whether they are thinly or well clad, whether they are healthy or weaklings, whether they are developing into the promise of manhood and womanhood, or whether early broken by poverty, hunger, want, toil, and despair they are sinking into untimely graves. All this I want to know. There is one thing more important, far more important than the prosperity of mills and mines, and that is the welfare of those who operate them; there is one thing more important than that there shall be a wholesome balance upon the right side of the ledger of these great institutions that have made us prosperous and powerful, and that is that the unknown and unseen thousands whose sweat and toil have gone to add to their prestige and their power shall receive a share of that prosperity, that their children shall be protected, and that their women, as far as possible, shall be saved from unwomanly toil.

When we have sought a nearer view of this nether world of want and toil, the Census has answered with numbers, numbers, nothing but numbers. This legislation is in the interest of ten thousand times ten thousand who have lived and died and are only known by numbers. They are numbered in the factory; they are numbered in the census; they are numbered in the potter's field. I will rejoice to find any department of this Government which could give a living picture of these people. For one, I am willing to look at their rags; I am willing to hear their wail of anguish or of despair, and there is nothing, however sensational it may be, if it is a true story of human want, of wrong to the helpless, wrong especially to women and to children, to the helpess, wrong especially to women and to children, that I am not willing to know, though it should move the whole continent to indignation or to tears. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate is closed on this amendment and paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that debate has been proceeding by unanimous consent. Of course the Chair has no power to regulate that, because by unanimous consent anything may be done.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the committee has voted to close debate, and I shall object to any further extension of it. I ask unant-mous consent that the amendment be reported, so that the House may know exactly what it is voting for.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit a request that five minutes time may be accorded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, we have now discussed this question almost an hour. The question of the employment of women and children is not involved; it is only a practical question as to where this investigation shall be made, and the committee has already decided to close debate, and the affirmative of this proposition has consumed more time than the negative side bate; the committee has absolute power.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move, then, Mr. Chairman, that debate on the pending amendment and paragraph be closed at ten minutes to 10 o'clock, and the time, five minutes, be now allowed to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate be closed in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause. I The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. I serve notice, Mr. Chairman, that I shall object to any further extension.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the general subject-matter is certainly a very important one. As for a choice of these bureaus, without assuming to know very much about it, it seems to me that for the purposes of this investigation the Bureau of Labor is the preferable one. I do not understand where is the foundation for the fear or supposition that dangerous, sensational reports will emanate from that Bureau. Upon the other hand, I do not see just where is the desirability of having anything so cold and so unemotional and so unattractive and so uninteresting and so uninforming that it would be worth nothing to the country or to the Congress, unless we are trying to guard ourselves against some dangers which do not exist and protect ourselves from some evils which are not by any means impending.

I wish to call attention to another matter, Mr. Chairman. As an argument against conferring this power upon the Bureau of Labor the suggestion is made that an act was passed a short time since with reference to the liability of employers of labor, and that a judge somewhere, upon some pretext or for some reason or no reason, has declared it unconstitutional. Then the assumption seems to follow, without ground for it, I think, that the dictum of this judge is law and that it is unconstitutional, and that the Congress lost its head, and is liable to do it again unless we take great care as to where the duty of this investigation shall go. Now, I would hardly like to have it understood, as a matter of course, and would hardly like to have the sanction of the House of Representatives given to-night to the proposition that, because of the decision of that judge overturning a law pretty carefully considered and certainly designed to accomplish a useful purpose, it is an unconstitutional law and of no value at all, and that Congress lost its head when it passed it. Another thing. I understand perfectly well, or I think I do, that Congress has no power to legislate upon the subject of child labor in the States. I believe, however, that there is power in Congress to legislate with regard to the transmission in the mails or in interstate commerce of various products. have believed, and believe yet, that Congress could legislate constitutionally with regard to the transmission in interstate and foreign commerce of trust-made goods. If that is true, I do not know whether Congress could not also legislate upon the sub-ject of goods manufactured by child labor, by the labor of children who ought to be in school, by the labor of children who ought to be treated as human beings and not merely as animated machines for the making of money, when those goods are offered for shipment by mail or as articles of interstate commerce. believe, too, it is possible for Congress to legislate within constitutional limits upon prison-made goods,

My object in making these remarks, Mr. Chairman, is not to influence legislation here now and upon this subject particularly, but that it may not go without challenge that here a law upon a most important subject is to be held unconstitutional, because some judge has said that it is unconstitutional. Neither do I wish it to go without challenge that because we can not legislate directly upon child labor in the States, we can not legislate at all with reference to the products of that kind of labor. And as to the choice of bureaus, as I said before, I think we need not guard ourselves so carefully against the supposed sensational results that may follow the committing of this work to the Bureau of Labor. The Bureau of Labor was organized, among other things, for the purpose of correcting labor conditions, of lessening labor abuses, and of bringing about a better condition of things in the general field of labor; and does seem to me that logically and naturally and properly this investigation would fall to the lot of that Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seem to have it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 96.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Elevator, old Post-Office Department building: For the construction of an elevator in the F street wing of the old Post-Office Department building, occupied by the Department of the Interior, $6,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph just read on page 92, line 1, down to and including line 4.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is not subject to the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order made by What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That it is new legislation.
Mr. TAWNEY. This is providing for the improvement and necessary repairs to a building now in use by the Government. It is for an elevator in the old Post-Office building or the building that used to be occupied by the Post-Office Department, and is now occupied by the Land Office.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a Government building?
Mr. TAWNEY. It is a matter of common utility in the use of that building-a necessary utility.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a Government building? Mr. TAWNEY. It is a Government building—the old Post-Office building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I submit, Mr. Chairman, it is not an appropriation for the repair of a Government building. It is an appropriation for the installation of something in a Government building that never has been there before. It is not to repair an elevator, but it is to construct an elevator and place it in a certain building.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard further?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not, Mr. Chairman. The building is a Government building and owned by the Government. This is a necessary utility for the use of the building.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order

Mr. TAWNEY. It would be just as necessary

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he understands the point made by the gen-The Chair desires to ask the gentleman tleman from Florida, which is that it is not for the repair, but for the construction of something entirely new in the building?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, assuming that it is an addition, it has been ruled this evening that an amendment which I offered for the purchase of additional lands and for the provision of an addition to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving was in order, and it is in the same category exactly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Suppose that in one of these Government buildings you undertook to add one door or put in another door; that would be a new door. Are we estopped from making a door?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is well satisfied. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Capitol building shall hereafter be open to visitors from 9 o'clock a.m. until 4 o'clock p.m. on Sundays and holidays.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make the point of order on page 92, line 12, down to and including line 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order to the paragraph just read, from line 12 to line 14, inclusive, on page 92. What is the point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. It changes existing law, the gentleman

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman state what law it changes? There is no law fixing the time, the days, or the hours the Capitol shall be open.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then it is the enactment of new

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, it is a regulation or care of a public building.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir; it relates entirely to the care or regulation of the Capitol building in which Congress performs its functions

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If in fact there be no law now to regulate the hours that this building shall be open, and you pass a regulation of this kind, is that not an enactment of a law on the proposition? Therefore is it not new legislation? Mr. GROSVENOR. It is carrying out the general power of the Government to regulate the control and the management of its public buildings—the general law of ownership, which car-ries with it the inevitable inference of the power to regulate. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. But, after all, if the Government has not seen fit to make a regulation and makes it by legislation, is it not new?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Perhaps they have not heretofore had a regulation, or, perhaps, some other and different regulation. The law of control is the law that gives the Government this right to control and manage its own public building. It is Incident to its ownership. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact of the order that is issued to the employees of this Capitol. They come here and can not get in on a Sunday with a member of their family. An order is issued, perhaps, closing the Capitol entirely, not only to the public, but to those who have the right to be here on Sunday or any other day. Now, it certainly is in the power of Congress, that has absolute control over this building, to remodel or modify or change or entirely repeal a regulation of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Can it be done on an appropriation bill? In other words, the Chair will ask the gentleman from Minne-sota after this shall have been passed, if it is really passed, will it not then have all the binding force and effect of law?

Mr. TAWNEY. It will.

The CHAIRMAN. And in that respect, is it not legislation on a proposition where no law exists?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, it is an exercise of power that comes through an act of Congress, which is legislation.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there can be no doubt about it. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN. I desire to be heard on the side I think the Chair has indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is clearly obnoxious to the rule, and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To complete the construction of the fireproof building for committee rooms and offices for the House of Representatives, provided for in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1903, including not exceeding $500 for the purchase of necessary technical and other books, $1,050,000, to continue available until expended.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for information on lines 18 and 19, "including not exceeding $500 for the purchase of necessary technical and other books," for the fellows who are building that house over

Mr. TAWNEY. For the Superintendent of the Capitol and his office force.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why doesn't he buy his own books? Mr. TAWNEY. These are books that are used in connection with his service—drafting books, technical works relating to engineering and to architecture—purely technical books.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would not have any objection to furnishing him with books if he needs them, but that is a curious clause to put in there.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that nearly every appropriation that is carried in an appropriation bill for any Department has language similar to this for the purchase of books. Heretofore the language has been much broader than it is to-day, as carried in the appropriation bills at this session, for the reason that the Committee on Appropriations has discovered that under the language heretofore employed the Departments have maintained a large fiction library; and we have therefore cut down or reduced that authority for the purchase of books to those that are needed only in the technical work of the Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If that is true, why does not your committee take it in hand and shut off the fiction books?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations reported a provision in the legislative bill at this session for that very purpose, but it did not meet with the unanimous approval of the House, and it went out on a point of order. I hope, however, before this session ends, that we may be able to satisfy the gentleman who made the point of order that we have sufficiently investigated this question to determine that it is not necessary for the good of the service nor of the employees in any of these Departments for the Government to maintain a fiction or belles-lettres library in the Departments

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should think you would not have any trouble in convincing anybody that had any sense of the correctness of that proposition.

Mr. MANN. It was I who made the point of order to which the gentleman refers [laughter], and I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the item that he has now under consideration the Superintendent of the Capitol could expend $500 in the purchase of novels. The gentleman made a proposition in the legislative appropriation bill, which went cut on a point of order made by me, restricting the books bought in each Department to technical books, and if I may have the attention of the gentleman, the item now under consideration is-

For the purchase of necessary technical and other books. "Other books" includes all books, to the extent of $500, and under this appropriation it is not necessary to spend a cent for technical books. For aught the appropriation provides, the Superintendent of the Capitol may purchase and read, the day after this bill becomes a law, a book on The Quick and the Dead.

Mr. TAWNEY. I intend to offer an amendment striking out the words "and other."

Mr. MANN. I am very glad I have called the gentleman's attention to a flaw in his bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is not a very serious one. Mr. TAWNEY. I move as an amendment, in line 20, page 92, to strike out the word "and other."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I should like to ask the gentleman what becomes of these books after they are bought? property are they?

Mr. TAWNEY. They belong to the Government.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 92, line 20, strike out "and other."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to ask the gentleman what objection there is to the general library buying these books and then the Superintendent of the Capitol drawing them?

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you mean the Library of Congress?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Library of Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, they are books that are in constant use. Of course, under the regulations of the Library of Congress, they would have to be taken from the Library all the time, and I suppose that for reference some of the books are bought by the Library, and can be obtained there; but these books referred to here are a part of the tools used by the Superintendent of the Capitol and those charged with the responsibility of the construction of these buildings. They are using them daily in the work, and are just as essential as drawing instruments are.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the Superintendent of the Capitol have to buy $500 worth of books?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We found in the Department of Agriculture the same trouble. Every bureau was inclined to build up its own library. We put a stop to it; and made all the books purchasable on estimates by the general librarian in the Department of Agriculture, and each bureau chief draws out such books as he desires. In other words, you will have here another library started in a few months.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell us how much it allows for the purchase each year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the Agricultural library? About $12,500 a year; but that library would not be accessible to the Superintendent of the Capitol, I suppose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, that amount shocks me. I was just going to ask the gentleman from Iowa why they wanted as much as $500 worth of books called for in this item. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. Would not the books when purchased belong to the Congressional Library? All the books that we have in the committee room are cared for by the Congressional Library.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that they would belong to the Congressional Library. They are bought under a specific appropriation, for a specific purpose, and for a specific officer.

Mr. LACEY. The books, as the gentleman knows, in the committee rooms are marked as the property of the United States and belong to the Library.

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be; I do not know what the law is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furnishing the office building, House of Representatives, including furniture for office rooms, furniture for caucus and retiring rooms, and for kitchen and restaurant equipment, $300,500, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended; said appropriation to be expended by the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, under the direction of the Commission of the House of Representatives designated by law to supervise the construction of said office building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee who is the consulting architect for the House office building, if

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Hastings.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the chairman know who is the consulting architect for the Senate office building?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it not the other member of the same firm of which Mr. Hastings is a member?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it not true that that gentleman receives a salary of $10,000 a year?

Mr. TAWNEY. The House has nothing to do with the construction of the Senate office building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand that, but is it not true that that firm is the firm of consulting architects for the extension of the Capitol? Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and offer this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 6 on page 93 the following: "Provided, That no portion of the sums appropriated by these paragraphs shall be expended in the payment of services of architects rendered after September 1, 1907."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that on the ground that it changes existing law. Although it is a limitation on an appropriation, it does change the law which authorizes the contract which has been made for the services of this man in connection with the construction of this building. The term of that service is to conclude in three years from the date of his first employment and has very nearly expired.

The CHAIRMAN. A contract heretofore made?

Mr. TAWNEY. Heretofore made under authority of law.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think it has been a frequent ruling of the Chair that an appropriation that is offered to be made for a lawful purpose may be limited. For instance, where the salary of an officer under the law is entitled to draw four or five thousand dollars a year, a limitation may be made in the amount appropriated. I think this is what is attempted to be done here. I would like to ask the gentleman, in this connection, how much that architect for the House building gets; what is his annual salary? Mr. TAWNEY. Ten thousand dollars a year instead of 5 per cent, which is the usual fee of a consulting architect.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. It seems to me that this House building has been about two years longer in construction than we were told it would take when the first appropriation was made. I am one of those who believe that as long as these men have $10,000 a year as consulting architects for the House building and $10,000 for the Senate building, making $20,000 a year, besides the Capitol extension, that having control of that work they are not liable to hasten the completion of the buildings.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? Is the gentleman aware of the fact that this man is only a consulting architect, that he has no control whatever over the construction of the building or its superintendents? He can not delay it a minute if he wanted to.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How often does he visit the building?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. About how often?
Mr. TAWNEY. He is consulted, He is merely employed as a consulting architect, and passes upon the plans and details and the specifications. The construction of the building is under the control and superintendency of the Superintendent of the Capitol.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is altogether probable that the delay in the completion of this building has resulted because the consulting architect has some plans over in New York that he has not worked out yet, and I for one think that the amendment is in order—not only in order, but I think it ought to be adopted for the purpose of hurrying along this It is two years behind now. Baltimore has been burned down and built up since this post-office building was commenced, and yet it looks to me.like it is not more than half I am afraid that the architects who are drawing $10,000 a year salary are lingering and loitering over the plans in their office and in New York, and thereby retarding the completion of that building.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would not detain the committee one moment if it were not for the statements made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shackleford], which are not borne out by the facts. The building has not been delayed. I will assert on this floor that that building will be completed from the time they commenced breaking ground for the foundation in less time than any other building that has ever been erected of its kind and character and cost in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Have any of them ever been completed within the time they ought to have been completed?

Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Which?
Mr. TAWNEY. The Congressional Library building was, and it was completed within the limit of cost.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell the committee when we are going to get this building to use?

Mr. TAWNEY. This building was commenced two years ago. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There was no consulting engineer of the Congressional Library. That was done under the War De-

Mr. TAWNEY. The delay, if there was any delay, was due to the litigation necessary in order to obtain the title to this ground, the site. There is where the delay was. By the 1st of December, when the Sixtieth Congress convenes, that building will be ready for occupancy, and it is for that reason that this appropriation is carried. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman stated that this is being constructed in less time than any other building of the sort ever I want to cite to the gentleman from Minnesota the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden], who occupies a seat on that side of the Chamber, and who is a contractor, who erected a building costing $5,000,000 in Chicago in one year, and had to excavate a concrete foundation 100 feet to begin, and yet completed it perfectly in one year. That was a larger building than this.

Mr. TAWNEY. I stated what is the fact, and my comparison was made with other buildings erected in the District of Co-

Mr. SIMS. Oh, the District of Columbia buildings, and not in Chicago, where they do things.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman's statement did not apply to a Member of Congress, did it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there are two paragraphs in this bill with reference to the House office building, one an appropriation for the building and the other an appropriation for the furniture. The amendment offered by the gentleman is to the paragraph with reference to the furniture. provides that we shall not pay the architect out of the appropriation for the furniture. That is not germane to that parapriation for the furniture. That is not germane to that graph, and if it is adopted it will not mean anything at all. gentleman allowed the paragraph to pass with reference to the building, and has failed to offer any amendment to that section. The amendment is offered to this section and is absolutely senseless and will have no effect if enacted.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Smith] has discovered something most remarkable. He can not split up a paragraph in that sort of style. Now, I want to show, Mr. Chairman, only one paragraph here. just how much this gentleman, who is a member of the committee, knows about it.

For furnishing the office building, House of Representatives, including furniture for office rooms, furniture for caucus and retiring rooms, and for kitchen and restaurant equipment, $300,500, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended; the said appropriation to be expended by the Superintendent of the United States Capitol building and grounds, under the direction of the Commission of the House of Representatives designated by law to supervise the construction of said office building.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is a part of the preceding appropriation, and, as I understand the rule, I could wait until the end of that section before I offered my amendment. I am offering it, Mr., Chairman, to the subject-matter here. I am undertaking to limit the purpose of this appropriation. It is not an enactment of new law, it is not a creation of a new law. It is not an abrogation of present law at all, but it is simply a limitation upon this appropriation made for this office building, and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the distinguished chairman of the committee says that they have made a contract with the supervising architect for three years. I presume they have made this contract with him for three years, regardless of when the build-ing is finished. In other words, if that building is finished within one year, they go on and pay the salary of the architect for two years longer when every duty of his has expired and he has none whatever.

Is that what the gentleman means? Why, gentlemen, they make a contract for the construction of a building whether it is one, two, three, four, or five years. I think, Mr. Chairman, that if there is such a contract as that that that contract ought to be sumitted to this House, and this House ought to know what officers of the Government are engaged in contracts like that and by what authority of law they are making such contracts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida has offered an amendment and the gentleman from Minnesota made a point of order on the amendment, as the Chair remembers the parliamentary status. We are reading the bill by paragraph. If the committee will notice the paragraph passed on page 92, it referred to "the construction of the fireproof building for committee rooms and offices for the House of Representatives, provided for in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1903, etc." That paragraph is a complete paragraph, and 4f anyone had sought to amend that paragraph the amendment must have been offered at the end of line 21, and any amendment to that paragraph comes in too late. If the members of the committee will read the other paragraph, beginning at the bottom of page 42 and line 22 of the page, it reads: "For furnishing the office building, House of Representatives, including furniture for office rooms, furniture for caucus and retiring rooms, and for kitchin and restaurant equipment, $300,500, etc."

"Said appropriation—that is, for furnishing—to be expended by the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds under the direction of the Commission of the House of Representatives," etc.; which paragraph has reference solely to appropriations for furnishing the House of Representatives office building. The gentleman now seeks to amend here by this amendment: "Provided, That no portion of the sums appropriated in this paragraph shall be expended in payment for services of architect rendered after September 1, 1907." The Chair thinks that the amendment is not at all germane to the paragraph that is being considered, and therefore sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota never made any such point of order. from Minnesota made the point of order that it was out of order because it undertook to restrict this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Iowa made the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You could not have two points of order pending at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not considering the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota. [Laughter.] Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, that is all right.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the paragraph in regard to furniture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 93, after line 6, insert:

"House of Representatives office building: For maintenance, including heating, lighting, and ventilation, miscellaneous items, and for all necessary services, $30,000. And the said office building and the employment of all service, other than officers and privates of the Capitol police, that may be appropriated for by Congress, necessary for its protection, care, and occupancy, shall be under the control and supervision of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, subject, until said building is completed, to the approval and direction of the Commission appointed under the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1903, to supervise the construction of said building; and such control and supervision by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds shall be and continue after the completion of said building, and not later than after July 1, 1908, subject to the approval and direction of a Commission consisting of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and two Representatives in Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker. Vacancies occurring by resignation, termination of service as Representative in Congress, or otherwise in the membership of said Commission shall be filled by the Speaker, and any two members of said Commission shall constitute a quorum to do business. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds shall submit annually to Congress estimates in detail for all services, other than officers and privates of the Capitol Building and Grounds shall submit annually to Congress estimates in detail for all services, other than officers and privates of the Capitol Building and necessary for its protection, care, and occupancy; and said Commission to govern said Superintendent in making all such employments, together with rules and regulations governing the use and occupancy of all rooms and space in said building."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that amendment

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, there is no question but that the amendment is subject to a point of order, but I want to make a statement.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, just one word. I have no notion or desire to press the point of order, but in the hurried reading of it I did not catch just what it was. is the reference to July, 1908?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, as I stated a moment ago, that the Superintendent of the Capitol, who has control of the construction of that building, states to the Committee on Appropriations that it will be complete and ready for occupancy at the beginning of the Sixtieth Congress.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is good.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in that connection. What time is fixed when the gentleman says in his amendment "not later than July 30, 1908?"

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will wait I will explain the amendment. If the language is there that the gentleman mentions, it is a mistake in writing. Now, we have got to provide for some form of government over there in that building, and if the building is to be ready for occupancy by the 1st of December we must make some provision for it at this session of Congress. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the attention of the Commission under whose general supervision this building is being constructed was called to this fact, and the Commission concluded, after consideration of the whole subject, that they would recommend to the House an appropriation for lighting and heating and for services to the amount of $30,000, which will carry us over to the beginning of next fiscal year, and thus enable us at the next session of Congress, when we once get into the building and have more information in regard to the rules and regulations of how it should be governed, to act upon that later and better information.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. This is not intended to postpone the completion of the building until July 8, 1908?

Mr. TAWNEY. This is intended to enable the Superintendent to arrange for the purchase of the fuel he will have to have in order to heat the building next fall before the meeting of the

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw

Mr. TAWNEY. It is also for the purpose of employing such personal services in the care of the building as may be necessary until July 1, 1908. Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order until I can secure some information. This is quite an important amendment. And if it be done it ought to be printed in the Record and the matter go over until to-morrow. This Commission is authorized to assign rooms in the building, and that is quite an important matter to every Member of the House. We ought to know something about the power of the Commission, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the paragraph and amendment with the point of order pending be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Littlefield in the chair). The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] asks unanimous consent that the paragraph, the amendment, and the point of order reserved be passed for the time being.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For the time being, without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add to it that it be placed in the Record, so that we can get it.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] insist upon his point of order?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not want to insist upon the point of order; no.

The CHAIRMAN. Then let the gentleman from Indiana withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I renew the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida insist on the point of order?
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] a question. I wish to say that this morning I received notice that had some reference to sixteen hours, and I desire to ask the chairman of this committee if that notice was intended to give us notice that we will be held here to-day for sixteen hours continuously without

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from South Dakota that it had no reference to the labor of the House to-day. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furnishing the office building, House of Representatives, including furniture for office rooms, furniture for caucus and retiring rooms, and for kitchen and restaurant equipment, $300,500, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended; said appropriation to be expended by the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, under the direction of the Commission of the House of Representatives designated by law to supervise the construction of said office building.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after line 5, page 93, the following: "Provided, That none of the money herein appropriated shall be paid to any consulting architect for services rendered after September 1, 1907."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon that amendment. It is not germane to the paragraph to which the amendment has been offered. And I will say further, Mr. Chairman, that another ground upon which the point of order can be made is that it may contravene the provisions of the contract made in accordance with the law out of which the appropriation is to be made and from which the obligations under the contract must be met.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota to state that the Government has already made a contract?

Mr. TAWNEY. It has made a contract covering this building and the heating plant.

The CHAIRMAN. That this appropriation is for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of that contract, that this limitation would defeat the provisions of the contract, and prevent the Government from carrying out its obligations?

Mr. TAWNEY. For all the purposes of the construction of this building and this heating plant, including the services of a consulting architect.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida controvert that?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I think that this House ought to be permitted to see that contract, and know if the contract is in such form, and determine whether or not the terms are proper.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair inquires of the gentleman from Florida whether he controverts the statement of fact made by the chairman of the committee?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state to the Chair that I am not in position to do that. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the gentleman from Minnesota has stated the fact or simply his conclusions as to what the contract is. The House might put a different construction upon the contract if the gentleman were to produce it.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota is the only information the Chair has as to the contract, and in the absence of that being controverted the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations about this amendment that he had up here. I want to know what there is in it to determine how each man is going to get his own room.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri the amendment will be printed in the Record to-morrow mornig. It has been ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, we may get in a better humor to-morrow and let it in.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Commission will control the assignment

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that it is now half past 10 o'clock. You have got down to the improvement of the Capitol grounds. You seem to have reached the point where the committee could rise. I guess the committee had better rise.

Mr. TAWNEY, I would say to the gentleman that I would like to continue until 11 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Chairman. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 83. Mr. HEFLIN. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-eight gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand for tellers. Tellers are ordered. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes

So the motion was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudalent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, $250,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 96, line 15, after the word "dollars," insert:

"Provided, That no portion of the amount herein appropriated shall be used in examining or investigating any entry or final proof heretofore made under the homestead laws upon which final receipt has been issued unless there shall have been filed against said entry some charge of fraud or noncompliance with the law."

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order on the amend-

Mr. MONDELL. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I also reserve a point of order on the sub-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want it understood that I wish to be heard on the amendment which I offer.

If there be no objection, the substitute The CHAIRMAN. will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 21, page 96, insert:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the examination of the lands embraced in any entry upon which final proof has been made in accordance with law and against which no contest, protest, complaint, or information alleging specific violation of the law has been filed."

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the gentleman from Minnesota may reserve a point of order against both proposi-

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. MANN. What is it that is sought to be done by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. Unless unanimous consent is granted, the gentleman could not reserve points of order against two amendments at the same time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, he desires to reserve points of order!

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to make a statement to the committee, and then

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary in-tiry. What is the request for unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota desires to reserve points of order against both amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object to the request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida objects to the request for unanimous consent to have both points of order pending at the same time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. Do I understand the Chair to say that it requires unanimous consent to enable the gentleman from Minnesota to reserve points of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to make a statement— Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not want the gentleman to do that until I know whether points of order have been reserved against these two amendments, so that they can go out if there is no law for them.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is all right.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is only fair to state to the committee—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that except by unanimous consent the first point of order must be disposed of before another amendment can be pending.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Before entertaining the second amendment the first point of order must be disposed of, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object to unanimous consent.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, pending that point of order, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 22, 1907.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale, offered the following prayer:

Let us now praise famous men and our fathers that begat us. Leaders of the people by their counsel, wise were they; their words were for the instruction of the people; their glory shall never be blotted out; their bodies were buried in peace, and their names live for all generations.

The Lord God gave him commandments face to face, even the law of life and knowledge.

Let us pray. Father, here are our prayers for ourselves, for our homes, for this Congress, for the nation, and for the world, That these memories of the past may not be in vain as we look forward to to-day and to-morrow and the future. That this people of America may know what gift Thou wast pleased to give them when Thou didst send to be Thy servant here him who was first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen. And that for to-day and to-morrow and for the days that are to come, each of us—we are all Thy children—shall seek to enter into Thy work; yes, as the Father of his Country entered into his to lift up that that has fallen down, to open eyes that have been blind and ears that have been deaf, and to live in the service of the living God, that we may do justly, that we may love mercy, and that we may walk humbly with our God.

Here is our prayer. Answer us and bless us as Thine own children, in Christ Jesus.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever and ever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

On request of Mr. Burrows, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Farewell Address of George Washington will be read, under the order of the Senate, by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett].

Mr. BURKETT (at the Secretary's desk) read the address, as follows:

An address of George Washington to the people of the United States September 19, 1796.

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation night imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise and as an instructive example in our annals that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead; amidst appearances sometimes dubious; vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging; in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution which is the your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment,

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cor-dial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated, and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvements of interior communications by land and water will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage. whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionately greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same governments, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop to your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations-Northern and Southern, Atlantic and Westernwhence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of a party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be The inhabitants of our bound together by fraternal affection. western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerts. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their continuous contractions. stitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common counsels and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which may impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

The spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischief of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. cessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against inva-sion by others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duty of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instru-ments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursement to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burthen which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives; but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature.

Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or

Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from which equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation a commendable deference for public opinion or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they af-ford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorite are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect

Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vieissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not legally hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interests, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world, so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But, in my opinion, it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take and was bound in duty and interest to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes,

Though in reviewing the incidents of my Administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am, nevertheless, too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently be seech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views it in the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow-citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

conference report.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have confidence that the action of the conference committee on this bill will be approved, but at the same time, if any important changes have been made, think we ought to know something more than we can ascertain simply by a designation of these amendments by number. Of course, there are always a number of minor matters which it is not necessary to bring to the attention of the Senate, and I myself would be satisfied with the assurance of the Senator from Illinois that there are no matters of material importance which are disposed of otherwise than they were passed upon by Mr. CULLOM. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that there are but two or three amendments involved in the conference report besides the one in relation to the salary question, which we all know was settled in the Senate itself, which I suppose neither the Senator nor anybody else would feel interested in having an explanation of. One is the index provision. Another is the provision in reference to the appropriation of $20,000 for the investigation of cotton, etc. Those two, I think, are practically all which are of special interest to the Senate.

The index question was settled, and I think it would be just as well for the Secretary to read the provision that the conferees finally agreed upon in order that Senators may see exactly what it is.

Mr. BACON. Yes The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the provision in the conference report, as requested by the Senator from Illinois.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment No. 40. In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Indexes, digests, and compilations of law: To continue the preparation of the new index to the Statutes at Large, in accordance with a plan to be previously approved by the Judiclary Committees of both Houses of Congress, and to prepare such other law indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required by Congress for official use—namely, for one assistant, $1,800; one assistant, $1,200; one assistant, $900; two assistants at $720 each, and $500 as additional compensation to the law librarian; in all, $5,840; and authority is hereby given to pay the persons appointed under the act of June 13, 1906."

Mr. CULLOM. The original proposition, as it appeared in the bill which came to us from the House of Representatives, declared that an agreement had already been entered into by the House Judiciary Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee. That turned out, however, to be untrue so far as the Senate Judiciary Committee was concerned, and it appeared that no consideration of the subject had ever been given by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate at all. That was one of the things that was objected to by the Senate. The Senate will observe that in this agreement we have provided that nothing shall be done until it has been first agreed to by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses, and then after that the indexing shall be controlled not by Cabinet officers or the Departments or Bureaus or anything of that kind, but be absolutely in the control of the Congress of the United States; and that we finally consented to.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the Senator ask for the reading of the amendment in reference to the cotton reports.

Mr. CULLOM. I can make a statement, without reading the provision, so that the Senator will understand exactly what

The original provision with reference to investigations abroad provided that $30,000 should be expended, without specifying what particular thing it should be expended upon. Some Senators objected to that and desired that $20,000 or $50,000 should be appropriated for the investigation of cotton and cotton-seed The House conferees objected very strenuously, not against the appropriation of $50,000, but against the designa-tion of any particular thing to be investigated. After long discussion and delay and attempts to get together, we could not do so except upon striking out everything pertaining to any particular manufacture or product that should be investi-

To tell the whole story, after we found that we could not get to an agreement without striking out those words, we called up the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and informed him that we were going to strike those words out, but we wished to have a distinct understanding on his part that the investigation of cotton should go on just exactly as though those words were left in.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say that my object in asking for a statement with reference to this amendment was to have the Senator make the statement which he has just The fact was within my knowledge, and I desired the public to know that in this change there was not an abandonment of the design of Congress that there should be an investigation of cotton products.

Mr. CULLOM. Not in the slightest degree. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor pledged himself to us that it should not interfere with the investigation of the cotton interests.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to state, if the Senator will allow

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.
Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to state that I have seen the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and his understanding is as expressed by the Senator from Illinois. He has a memorandum in writing to the effect that there is to be no abandonment of the investigation of cotton and cotton products at all.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I do not think there is anything else in the conference report that needs explanation or discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

NOTICE OF MEMORIAL ADDRESSES.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, owing to the pressure of public business and the necessity of adjournment immediately after the eulogies to-morrow, I suggest that the services con-templated be set for 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT AGAINST POLYGAMY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no concurrent or other resolutions, morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be stated:

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. Dubois on February 21, as follows:

February 21, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, authorized and instructed to prepare and report to the Senate, within thirty days after the beginning of the next session of Congress, a joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress, proposing to the several States amendments to the Constitution of the United States which shall provide, in substance, for the prohibition and punishment of polygamous marriages and plural cohabitation, contracted or practiced within the United States; and which shall, in substance, also require all persons taking office under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or of any State, to take and subscribe an oath that he or she is not, and will not be, a member or adherent of any organization whatever the laws, rules, or nature of which organization require him or her to disregard his or her duty to support and maintain the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the several States.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I am not going to take any time.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I am not going to take any time The resolution in reference to the proposed constitutional amendment will, of course, be referred to the Judiciary Committee, and it seemed to me it would be better to refer the subject to the Judiciary Committee for a report. It will save the Judiciary Committee from examining a multitude of bills, perhaps, on the same subject, and power, of course, will be lodged in them finally to pass on what legislation, if any, they may deem necessary on the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to have the resolution passed now.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I did not hear all of the resolution read, but as I heard it it leaves nothing to the Judiciary Committee except to draft a constitutional amendment in accordance with the terms of the resolution. I hardly think the Senate is prepared to take so long a step, without consideration, as that proposed, and I move that the resolution be referred to the Judicia: y Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the resolution be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say that I am not hostile at all to an amendment of the Constitution prohibiting polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. On the contrary, I am myself in favor of making that a subject of Federal cognizance, and I do not make the motion in hostility to the principle at all.

Mr. DUBOIS. I trust, in addition to that, the Senator from Wisconsin is opposed to anyone exercising the rights of citizenship in the United States who belongs to an organization which puts the laws of that organization above the law of the United States. I trust that in considering this resolution the Senator from Wisconsin, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee, will also take that part of the resolution into consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I propose, on behalf of the committee, the amendment which I send to the desk, and which has been printed. It is in regard to estimates in detail and reports in detail. It is to be added at the bottom of page 73. I would say that it has passed the scrutiny of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that there is an amendwent offered by him which is pending. It is on page 41. Secretary will report the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 41, line 12, before the words "seven hundred," it is proposed to insert the words "one million."

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that that be laid aside until two or three minor amendments can be acted upon, and also until the grazing amendment can be taken up, as it may have some bearing on this.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 73, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

That hereafter on or before the 1st day of January of each year the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to Congress, in addition to the estimates now required by law, classified and detailed estimates of every subject of expenditure intended for the Agricultural Department for the next fiscal year, and detailed reports of all expenditures under any appropriation for such service during the preceding fiscal year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I feel admonished that I have already occupied so much of the time of the Senate in discussing the question involved in the part of the agricultural appropriation bill under consideration that I would not be justified in doing more than replying to those matters that have arisen or been presented to the Senate since I had occasion to submit my previous remarks. Preliminary to what I wish to say, I desire to look at the amendment just submitted, which, for the first time, I have had an opportunity to see in print, though I heard it read yesterday. I am led to inquire whether or not it will accomplish exactly what the Senator introducing it intends, or rather the full measure of his intention?

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the best answer I can make to that is to say that it was first proposed by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich]; that it afterwards had very critical examination yesterday and this morning by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison]; and that a very prominent Member of the other body, who has been especially interested in this subject, also examined it, and it received the united ap-proval of them all. We have adopted at the end of the forestry provision an amendment substantially like this, applying to for-estry alone. This is to apply that principle to the entire Department and all branches of it, and, of course, will include the amendment we have already adopted in regard to forestry. It will make that unnecessary, and I shall ask to have that stricken out, as the amendment I have now introduced covers it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?
Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, having been engaged in conference work-and I have considerable of it yet to do-I was not present yesterday when the amendment on page 70 was reached, and I observe that it had some consideration and was As I may not be able to be here later in the day, will ask the Senator from Vermont if he will not withdraw the pending amendment and let us go along with the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have finished the reading of the bill. Mr. GALLINGER. Finished the reading of the bill? As I understand, the Appalachian Mountain amendment was passed over, and it is on page 70. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont comes a little later than that. Could he not waive it for the time being and let us take up the Appalachian Mountain matter and dispose of it now?

Mr. PROCTOR. This is a very minor thing. Mr. GALLINGER. But it looks to me as though there would be discussion on it, as there has been on every other feature of Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator from Idaho will discover that there are other points to come up which will give him an ample opportunity and he will be speaking directly to the question before the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think there is some misapprehension in regard to the purpose I have in merely mentioning at this time the amendment just presented in a form in which Senators can see it. It was not my intention and I do not ask the privilege of the floor for the purpose of discussing the amendment, but to consider the question that we had up yesterday, and as to which I yielded the floor with the understanding that I would resume this morning.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly. I understood you very well, and that matter will come up again in a short time.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am glad to have elicited the explanation from the Senator from Vermont in regard to the relation between the amendment read this morning and the one pertaining especially to the Forestry Service. It was because of the existence of the two amendments that I was led to inquire what interpretation would be placed upon an amendment so comprehensive as to include another amendment and something more. I am entirely satisfied as to the purpose of the amendment. presume the Senator in charge of the bill will withdraw the other amendment at the proper time, and this will be the completed measure.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will ask immediately to have it reconsidered and disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Vermont'

Mr. PROCTOR. The question is on the amendment which offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been reported. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

On page 42, lines 7 to 14, there are two Mr. PROCTOR. amendments. I think the first one was agreed to and the second one disagreed to, and a substitute was offered covering both and was agreed to. I move to reconsider the vote by which the substitute amendment was agreed to and then I ask that it be disagreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The amendment the Senator from Vermont asks to have reconsidered is not the amendment requiring that all receipts shall be put into the Treasury?

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask to have it reconsidered because we have just adopted an amendment at the close of the bill, drawn by the Senator from Rhode Island and the senior Senator from Iowa, which covers that.

Mr. LODGE. Let the amendment that is proposed to be I think it covers matter that is not in the disagreed to be read.

general amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as requested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

After the word "available," on page 42, line The SECRETARY. 7, the Committee of the Whole inserted the following:

Provided, That hereafter, on or before the 1st day of January of each year, the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to Congress detailed estimates of all expenditures intended for this service for the next fiscal year, and detailed reports of all expenditures under any appropriation for such service during the preceding fiscal year: Provided further, That all money received after July 1, 1907, by or on account of forest reservation revenue shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

Mr. LODGE. That is enough. I recall it. The second proviso covers something which is not covered by the general amendment and which ought to remain in the bill Mr. PROCTOR. Let it stand then. I will withdraw the mo-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to call the attention of the Secretary to a correction which should be made in the total on page 74, to cover the amendment adopted in regard to agricultural colleges, adding $240,000.

I ask that the grazing amendment on pages 71 and 72 be considered next; and I wish to say in regard to that as a reason for its being put into the bill, that the bill was all ready to be reported two weeks ago yesterday, when I was informed for the first time that there was a large delegation from the cattle association and from the sheep association of the ex-treme West, with a committee appointed by the president, who had already started on their way to Washington, and that it would be a discourtesy to them not to see them and to consider what they had to lay before us.

I will say that it was the most interesting committee hearing ever attended. They were men of large affairs, men who do things, men who understood what they were talking about, and they presented it very forcibly. They insisted that it was to they presented it very forcibly. They insisted that it was to their interest and to the general interest that their boundaries should be defined; that they might be forced to keep less cattle, but they could have better ones; and another thing especially that it would end the long period of lawlessness and crime that has prevailed in those cattle and sheep districts; that it had become a necessity to have some system. This amendment was prepared by members of the committee who were familiar with that interest, with a view of putting the matter before the public, and not with an expectation that it would be adopted.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to submit some rearks in regard to this measure. It seems to me we can not marks in regard to this measure. pass over or avoid the consideration of a question raised yes-terday by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner]. I do not think it should go out from this body to the country that the relation of the State and of the laws of the State to the public domain of the United States lying within the State is as stated by the Senator from Wisconsin. As was stated by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], basing his remarks, I believe, upon a decision by Judge Sawyer, then United States circuit judge for the eighth circuit, except as to property in the actual use of the Government for governmental purposes, the Government as proprietor of lands within a State occupies exactly the same relation that an individual does.

Let me repeat that statement. It was held by Judge Sawyer that the United States, outside of lands required for the pur-poses of the Government, occupied exactly the same relation toward its holding within the State as any citizen holding a toward its non-title of like quality.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. CARTER. To the end that the law upon this subject may be clearly understood, I think the statement of the Senator from Idaho is subject to another qualification. It is not sufficient that the Government occupy land for its own purpose to give it jurisdiction within the State. As to such land it is essential that the State shall cede to the General Government exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was coming to that.
Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. In a moment. In the admission act of every State so far as I have examined those acts it is provided that as a condition precedent to the operation of the law the State shall cede or resign its claim as against the United States to all lands within its borders that are necessary to the use of the United States.

I do not intend to read authorities or decisions of the courts in discussing this question, but propose rather to state the con-clusions arrived at by the courts and leave the matter subject to such investigation as Senators may desire to give it based upon the authorities.

It is not true as I see it that the United States in regard to its proprietorship of lands within a State occupies any different relation toward those lands under the laws of the State than an individual proprietor.

Mr. CARTER. Except as to exemption from taxation. Mr. HEYBURN. Except in the exemptions and exceptions already stated. I yesterday called the attention of the Senate, during an interruption of the Senator from Wisconsin, to a decision rendered during the present month, which was not new law, but only an affirmance of the principle that has always been enunciated by the Supreme Court upon that question. Were the law different the conditions would be intolerable. There would be within a State a sovereignty greater than the State, exercising rights beyond the control of the State, and yet receiving the protection and the administration of the State government. Such a condition was never contemplated by the Constitution or by any laws that have been made pursuant to the Constitution concerning this question. It is most important to consider that in connection with the subject under discussion at this time.

It was a most hasty proceeding, to denominate it mildly, on the part of Congress to have enacted the provision under which these reservations are created. It must be evident at this day, in the light of all that has transpired, that Congress never was guilty of so great a lapse in the consideration of its duty.

When I first came to this body I was in some doubt as to the wisdom of the rule which prevents general legislation being enacted as a part of a general appropriation bill; but as I have observed the danger emanating from that practice in the past and proposed in the present, I am convinced that no wiser rule could possibly exist. That is illustrated by an inspection of this provision of seven lines, attached to a general appropriation bill in the hurry that surrounds the consideration of appropriation bills in this body, where we receive them so late in the session, with the insufficient opportunity and disposition to discuss them. That Congress should have enacted on an appropriation bill a provision which created a new bureau that should control a portion of the public lands of the United States almost equal in area to the original thirteen States, and with a tendency to further grow, seems almost incomprehensible.

The provision itself is so disconnected, so inadequately expressed, as to challenge the attention of anyone who reads it. It means nothing; it says nothing; and it had to be interpreted with the most liberal spirit in order to be placed in operation at all. I call the Senate's attention to the language of these seven lines that commence nowhere and end nowhere, Section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891, is as follows.

That the President of the United States may, from time to time, set apart and reserve, in any State or Territory having public land bearing forests, in any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations, and the President shall, by public proclamation, declare the establishment of such reservations and the limits thereof.

Set apart what? It does not say what the President may set apart, whether it is land or animals or private privileges. The act does not say that he may set apart lands or forests. It simply says he may set apart and reserve. That is the end of the declaration as to what the President may do. That act had no vitality in it. It conferred no right or power upon the President. It did not authorize him to set apart lands of any character.

Mr. SPOONER. Read it again. Mr. HEYBURN (reading):

That the President of the United States may, from time to time, set apart and reserve, in any State or Territory having public land bearing forests, in any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations, and the President shall, by public proclamation, declare the establishment of such reservations and the limits thereof.

What is he to set aside? Lands? It does not say so. Forests? It does not say so. "Set aside a day for thanksgiving" could just as well be read into the section as lands or anything That is the kind of legislation which results from the consideration of questions of that vast importance as a rider upon a general appropriation bill.

Before this act became a law the Government of the United States was a landed proprietor within the boundaries of probably all of the States, outside of the original thirteen States, under some reservation or provision of law. It was not there as a superior member of the household of the State, with exceptional rights. When it created a State it was simply a land-owner within the State, subject to the control of the State as other fee-simple titles are controlled in a State.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. Is it not a cardinal rule of statutory construction that even if the language of an act be inartistic, it shall be construed to mean something?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer that by inquiring of the Senator if he has discovered that this language is inartistic?

Mr. SPOONER. The section is not exactly as I should have drawn it, but it bears but one construction-

That the President of the United States may, from time to time, set apart and reserve-

Mr. HEYBURN. What? Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that—in any State or Territory having public land-

And the veriest tyro who ever read an act or a decision would know that that did not mean the public lands of the State, and he would know that there is no such thing as the public lands of a Territory.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; but how about a right of way? The Government might have been reserving a right of way.

Mr. SPOONER. I am talking about the substance, not the shadow.

In any State or Territory having public land bearing forests, in any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth—

"Public lands." That has been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, as the Senator well knows, in Newhall v. Sanger and other cases, for it appears in all of the public-land laws as meaning lands owned by the United States subject, but for the passage of this act, to entry under the laws of the United States with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations—

"Public reservations;" any kind of a public reservation that would mean. Is not a forest reservation a public reserva-

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator-Mr. SPOONER. I am not through.

And the President shall, by public proclamation, declare the establishment—

That is mandatory-of such reservations and the limits thereof.

Now, if the Senator will read along down the page to what is quoted from the act of June 4, 1897, he will find a construction by Congress of the act, the language of which he criticises, and a ratification by Congress, to all intents and purposes, of the action of the President under the act of 1891, will be not?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I have failed to make myself understood in regard to the criticism. I am not attacking the va-lidity of this law for any purpose whatever. I was merely illustrating the inadvisability of this class of legislation being put as a rider upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I agree to that.
Mr. HEYBURN. But I have failed to direct the Senator's attention to the point of the criticism. It is the omission in the second line of the original act of the word "lands." am not distinguishing between State lands and public lands

Mr. SPOONER. The President-

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no subject to the sentence; that is all.

Mr. SPOONER. The President could not withdraw the atmosphere.

Mr. HEYBURN. He might have withdrawn bodies of water, and you could read "bodies of water, lakes, rivers" in there as well as "lands."

Mr. SPOONER. He could not withdraw a body of water bearing forests, could be?
Mr. HEYBURN. It need not bear forests.
Mr. SPOONER. But the law says so.
Mr. HEYBURN. I am merely suggesting—

Mr. SPOONER (reading):

Any part of the public land wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth.

I hardly think that could have been applicable to a body of of water.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator is not in the right line.
Mr. SPOONER. No man is who differs with my friend.
Mr. HEYBURN. I do not want to spend much time on this.
But it must be so obvious to the Senator that the words "public lands" were omitted in the second line, that if I have not made myself plain I would despair of being able to do so.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not the Senator's fault. It is my misfortune. I never have had much experience with the construction of statutes, but I was taught by a fairly good law-yer that it was a cardinal rule of statutory construction that if the language of a statute was not perfect it was the function of the court to seek the intent and to be governed by it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, it is impossible to construe this statute as meaning anything at all, except as authorizing the President not to withdraw lakes and bodies of water unless they bear forests and underbrush and all that, but to withdraw public lands not of the States, but of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, Mr. President, I entirely agree with

Mr. HEBURN. On, Mr. Fresident, I entirely agree with the Senator on that.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was raising the question as an illustration of the system of legislation and not as an interpretation of the act of Congress. It could avail us nothing to discuss the validity of this act of Congress at the present time, and I have no intention of entering upon it at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator to say that it began nowhere and ended nowhere-

Mr. HEYBURN. I shall have to adhere to that, Mr. SPOONER. And covered nothing.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, I find that the Senator and I are in entire accord as to the construction of it, and I withdraw what said about my misfortune and will relieve the Senator from further interruption.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not agree with the Senator that he was unfortunate in that regard at all.

Mr. SPOONER. It looked so.
Mr. HEYBURN. I merely desire to direct the attention of the Senate to the system of legislation. It is true that six years later Congress did repeal this provision of the act of 1891; that is to say, it vacated all Executive orders creating forest reserves under it. Pursuant to that action of Congress those reserves were re-created, I presume, to cover the acknowledged defects in the law. But that is not material to what I am going

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

If my friend will permit me, I do not in-Mr. SPOONER. tend to interrupt him, as I allowed him to interrupt me, ad libitum, but does he mean to say to the Senate that the act of June 4, 1897, in any wise revoked or even suspended the orders of the President made under the act of 1891?

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, the act can speak for itself. It reads-

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; it reads. Mr. HEYBURN. It reads—

All public lands heretofore designated and reserved by the President of the United States under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1891, the orders for which shall be and remain in full force and effect, unsuspended and unrevoked, and all public lands that may hereafter be set aside and reserved as public forest reserves under said act, shall be as far as practicable controlled and administered in accordance with the following provisions.

There is another portion of the act that is not in the little handbook I have here.

Mr. SPOONER. Right here, if the Senator will permit me, does not that explicitly recognize as in force and validate every Executive order reserving public land under the act of 1891 not theretofore unrevoked or suspended by the President, and also authorize a continuance of that policy? I speak with the language before me here.

Mr. HEYBURN. The purpose of this recital—
Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator agree with me?
Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer the Senator I I will answer the Senator. I think the Senator was reading from the same book I have in my hand, and it does not contain another provision of the statute that made this recital necessary. But that is immaterial to the question.

Mr. SPOONER. My friend will see that this is not a recital.

It is an absolute, positive, statutory declaration. Mr. HEYBURN. An affirmation.

Mr. SPOONER. An affirmation.

Yes. Mr. HEYBURN.

Mr. SPOONER. Both an affirmation as to the past and power as to the future.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and a previous section pointed out the reason for doing it. But that is not material. We are taking the time of the morning in discussing matters that arise incidental or preliminary to the presentation of the main question which I desire to discuss, and which the Senator discussed yesterday, and that is the relation which the State holds to the lands of the United States within its borders. You can not deal with the question before the Senate in this agricultural appropriation bill fairly without dealing with that subject and with-out considering it, because some of the amendments to the bill under consideration attempt to deal with the lands within the States as though the States had no rights at all over them and might not legislate for their use and control. It was stated in the Senate yesterday by a Member—I am not certain that I could designate the Senator accurately—it was stated, how-ever, that the United States holds such absolute dominion and control that it might disregard the existence of a State. is not the law. It is neither the letter nor the spirit of the law, nor the intention of the lawmakers. The Supreme Court of the United States evidently intended to settle that question, so far as a decision might settle it, in the case decided during the present month.

Mr. President, it would be a very grave mistake should the Senate by its legislation attempt to establish or recognize such a relationship between the General Government and the States as to the lands of the United States within a State as would interfere with the laws of the State that had been enacted for the control of those lands in the hands of the proprietor, subject to the same proprietary rights that an individual has. the proposed legislation in this bill goes away beyond the line limiting the power of the Government over these lands.

Mr. President, we are told that the forestry policy has come to stay. That is stated in some messages that have been reto stay. That is stated in some messages that have been received and in some communications that have passed from the Executive Department of the Government. "Forestry policy" is such a general term that it is almost impossible to deal with it. In the first place, "policy" is an entirely inappropriate term. This is not a government of policy. This is a government of law. The people would not be able to define the lines of a collier but that the people would not be able to define the lines of a policy, but they are able to define the lines of a law. Kings and emperors rule by policy. The policy of this or that auto-cratic rule is understood to be the will and pleasure of the ruler. But we have no corresponding element of power in this ruler. But we have no corresponding element or power in this country. The requisites of a law are that it must be certain in its provisions, so that the citizen, not the subject, may know the limit and lines of his rights. Policy pertains to subjects, and a subject at his peril estimates his privileges under a government by policy. A citizen estimates his rights under a law. That distinction between a government that is based upon a law. policy or a ruler and a government that is based upon a law made by the people themselves marks the distinction between the forest-reserve policy and its attributes under the rules and regulations of the Forester and the rights of the people to the free use and participation in the use of these public lands belonging to themselves.

Now, the courts have recognized that distinction. sion to which I referred, which is reported in the United States Supreme Court Reports, volume 114, in 1884, in the case of the Fort Leavenworth Railroad Company v. Lowe, lays down the following doctrine relative to this question:

following doctrine relative to this question:

When the United States acquire lands within the limits of a State by purchase, with the consent of the legislature of the State, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings, the Constitution confers upon them exclusive jurisdiction of the tract so acquired; but when they acquire such lands in any other way than by purchase with the consent of the legislature, their exclusive jurisdiction is confined to the erections, buildings, and land used for the public purposes of the Federal Government.

A State may, for such purpose, cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over a tract of land within its limits in a manner not provided for in the Constitution of the United States and may prescribe conditions to the esssion, if they are not inconsistent with the effective use of the property for the purposes intended.

If a State, thus cedling to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over a tract within its limits, reserves to itself the right to tax private property therein, and the United States do not dissent, their acceptance of the grant with the reservation will be presumed.

In the act admitting Kansas as a State there was no reservation of Federal jurisdiction over the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation. The State of Kansas subsequently ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, "saving further to said State the right to tax rallroad, bridge, or other corporations, their franchises and property, on said reservation." Held, That the property and franchises in the State of Kansas imposed according to its laws.

Now, there is the fullest measure of the exception to the principal of the content of the exception to the principal of the content of the exception to the principal of the content of the exception to the principal of the content of the exception to the principal of the exception to th

Now, there is the fullest measure of the exception to the principle I have stated that has been stated by any court at any time, and that is the fullest measure of the rights of the United States Government to any land within any State. It is a limitation of their rights that leaves no room for doubt or controversy. That rule leaves, so far as the right of the State to regulate and control by legislation the occupancy and enjoyment of open commons of the public lands of the United States within its boundaries is concerned, a free hand to the legislature.

The legislature of Idaho enacted a law regulating the use, occupancy, and enjoyment of the public lands of the United States within that State by citizens of the State of Idaho for grazing purposes. A controversy arose as to whether or not the State might so legislate. There are two points presented. One of them involved the right of a State to exercise a police power through its legislature. The Supreme Court passed upon that question, and then they proceeded to say:

Is it true, therefore, even if it be conceded that there is right or license to pasture upon the public domain, that the State may not limit or regulate the right or license?

That is the inquiry the Supreme Court put. They answer it

Defendants in error have an equal right with plaintiff in error, and the State has an interest in the accommodation of those rights.

There is the explicit declaration that individuals have a right, because of the enactment of a law by the State, to enjoy the lands of this proprietor within the State. It was suggested yesterday that it would be competent for the Government to fence those lands or to enact a statute; that it would be competent for Congress to enact a statute saying that no man should set his foot upon these lands of the Government that lie within the State. It would not be competent for Congress to do anything of the kind. The Supreme Court said—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator repeat that statement?

I did not hear it distinctly.

Mr. HEYBURN. It would not be competent for Congress to say that no man should set his foot upon the lands of the United States within a sovereign State. That is a regulation that can only be made by the legislature of a State, that is vested with the power to grant easements, rights of way, for ingress and egress over lands, and to exercise that general control. It is not a police power in any sense of the word, but it is a regulation of the relative rights of the citizens of the States to exercise those rights incident and necessary to their full enjoyment as such citizens,

The Supreme Court of the United States says that there are three parties to this consideration, and does not name the United States as one of them.

Defendants in error have an equal right with the plaintiff in error-That is, on the public lands, an equal right with the plaintiff

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Who is the plaintiff? Mr. HEYBURN. The parties named here. It is Bacon v. Walker et al. :

And the State has an interest in the accommodation of those rights. What does the word "accommodation" mean? It means the balancing and the harmonizing of the rights of parties upon something that belongs to neither of them, upon lands the title of which is in neither of them, as in this case.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana? Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I would not do it except the Senator invited the interruption by addressing his question to me.

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not interrupt me at all.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator claim that the right of control by the Nation over lands belonging exclusively to it is the same as that of an individual over lands belonging exclusively to him?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Supreme Court has said so. willing to take the voice of the Supreme Court as the ultimate wisdom on that question.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I pursue this line with just one or two more questions?

Mr. SPOONER. Then will both Senators allow me to interrupt both of them?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All right.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will join in that consent.
Mr. SPOONER. The Supreme Court say in this case, which has nothing whatever to do, as I read it, with this question, the following:

We speak only of the right to pasture, because plaintiff in error does not show that he is the owner of the land upon which his sheep grazed, and what rights owners of land may have to attack the statute we put out of consideration.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought the Supreme Court could not have said anything else than that. Now, may I pursue my

Mr. HEYBURN. I will throw some enlightenment on that suggestion, and I think I should do it in connection with the Senator's remarks. The Supreme Court said in effect that they were considering this question as to the right of parties on the public domain and not on their own individual and private That is the effect of that portion of the opinion. property. That is the effect of that portion Mr. SPOONER. The court said further

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Kean in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. There is nothing in connection with this case which raised the question, if I am capable of reading aright the decision, as to what power, if any, police power, the State has in respect to grazing upon the public domain of the United States against the will of the United States. The conflict was between two citizens, but the court say—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin will suspend. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated. The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 13566) to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act, approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to this. The court say:

Is it true, therefore, even if it be conceded that there is right or license to pasture upon the public domain—  $\,$

It was a case where the Government did not object, and no question was raised about it; it was a conflict between two citizens-that the State may not limit or regulate the right or license?

Now, the law was passed to operate upon and restrict citizens. Of course where the Government does not object citizens pasture their sheep and cattle on the public domain, and they are liable to the regulation made by the State, if it is made to operate upon them as citizens of the State, not upon the land. But the question here is whether they could pasture upon the public domain their cattle and their sheep if the Government of the United States said they should not and chose to fence it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is it.

Mr. SPOONER. This case does not and could not touch that question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course not. Mr. HEYBURN. That is an interesting question. I will agree with the Senator that the property of the Government may not be taken against its consent, and that to pasture on the public lands, should the Government forbid it, would be a violation of a just provision of the law and a violation of the rights of the Government. I was not discussing that question. I was discussing the question of the right to occupy and pass over and enjoy in common the public lands of the United States within a State and of the right of a State to provide by legislation for that enjoyment.

Mr. SPOONER. That is, where the Government consents? Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; where the Government consents; not otherwise.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Government is consenting.
Mr. SPOONER. So the Senator and I are not in disagreement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When I yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin I was asking a line of questions which the Senator from Idaho invited. I felt quite sure, although I had not seen this recent decision of the court, that precisely what the Senator from Wisconsin read must be in it, and my questions were designed to show it. However, in view of the Senator's admission, I will, with his permission, pursue my questions one or two questions further. Does the Senator say that the power of the Nation over lands belonging to it within a State is as great at least as that of an individual?

Mr. HEYBURN. Just the same.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. They are jus
Mr. HEYBURN. No more.

They are just the same; no less?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No less, at least?

Mr. HEYBURN. And no less. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, if they are no less, can the State pass a law which compels the individual to surrender control over his land?

Mr. HEYBURN. No. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the State can not pass such a law compelling the Nation to surrender its control over its land?

Mr. HEYBURN. No. Mr. BEVERIDGE. T

That is all I want to ask.

Mr. HEYBURN. That question is not involved in this consideration, and I was not discussing it except as incident to the consideration of the general power.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will find, when he reads his remarks, that he had gone so far as to insist that the State could pass laws controlling the authority of the nation over its own land.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is where the Senator misunderstood my position. I was discussing sections 1210 and 1211 of the Statutes of Idaho, and I will read them so that the Senator may understand to what this opinion was directed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am satisfied the Senator will find on reading his remarks that I interpreted his remarks exactly correctly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was discussing the question as a right existing between two individuals, one against the other, and that is the only question involved in this decision.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, Mr. President, that may be true as to what the Senator was discussing; but the Senator had gone into a very broad discussion of the relations of the State's authority to control the land of the nation, in which he made some very sweeping statements, and I think he will find that he went too far.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I did I think I can very soon make the record speak the truth, because I say now that my remarks were directed to the question involved in this case, and I will, of course, be controlled by the subject-matter of the decision and the consideration of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.
Mr. HEYBURN. The statute under consideration is comprised in two short sections:

prised in two short sections:

SEC. 1210. It is not lawful for any person owning or having charge of the sheep to herd the same, or permit them to be herded on the land or possessory claims of other persons, or to berd the same or permit them to graze within 2 miles of the dwelling house of the owner or owners of said possessory claim.

SEC. 1211. The owner or agent of such owner of sheep violating the provisions of the last section, on complaint of the party or parties injured before any justice of the peace for the precinct where either of the interested parties may reside, is liable to the party injured for all damages sustained; and if the trespass be repeated, is liable to the amount of damages sustained.

The Suppose Conet says in stating the feats:

The Supreme Court says, in stating the facts:

Defendants in error under the provision of those sections brought this action in the justice's court of Little Camas precinct, Elmore County, State of Idaho, for the recovery of $100 damages alleged to have accrued to them by the violation by plaintiff in error of the statutes, and obtained judgment for that sum. The judgment was successively affirmed by the district court for the country of Elmore and the supreme court of the State. (81 Pac., 155.) The case was then brought been sively affirmed by the district court for the county of Elmore and the supreme court of the State. (SI Pac., 155.) The case was then brought here.

It was alleged in the complaint of defendants in error, who were plaintiffs in the trial court, that plaintiff in error caused his sheep, about 3,000 in number, to be herded upon the public lands within 2 miles of the dwelling house of defendant in error. The answer set up that the complaint did "not state a cause of action other than the violation of sections 1210 and 1211 of the revised statzies of the State of Idaho," and that said sections were in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, of the Unite. States. The specifications of the grounds of the unconstitutionality of those sections were in the courts below and are in this court (1) that plaintiff in error has an equal right to pasture with other citizens upon the public domain, and that by imposing damages on him for exercising that right he is deprived of his property without due process of law.

Now, that raises the question squarely as to whether or not the legislature may enact a statute regulating the occupation and use of the public domain of the United States, and while the question of police power was discussed the court dismissed it and referred to this as the question upon which the rights of the parties must be determined.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This was a case involving the conflicting desires of two citizens to pasture on the public domain, which the Nation had not objected to?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, could the case have arisen at all if the Nation had objected?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; the United States is in the same position as any other proprietor of land. I have said it over and over again.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So the legislature could pass no law respecting the Nation's land over the objection of the Nation?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not contended that it could, nor is it a part of the subject-matter that I am discussing. The question might be raised upon this decision, but it is not necessary to raise it in considering the question I have been addressing myself upon.

I merely wanted to premise my statement by defining what, in my judgment, is the relation between the Government and the people of a State in regard to the use of the public lands. shall proceed briefly to some other suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin, who came into the Senate after the major portion of the discussion had passed and took up the question of the wisdom of the forest-reserve policy, and in an eloquent and able manner presented his views in support of what he calls the policy of the Department.

I would call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the question of policy and to the propriety of considering the question of policy in determining the question before us at this time. I do not take the question of policy or the principle of policy into consideration at all. I am discussing the legal of policy into consideration at all. rights of the States. I would submit this inquiry for considera-tion. With lands of the United States, having a legal status, subject to certain laws and rules as to the manner in which they may be acquired within a Territory, the Government making that Territory a State, upon the assumption that the natural resources undeveloped taken in connection with those developed will constitute the basis of the future growth and prosperity of the State, has the Government a right-and when I use the term right I mean the moral right—has the Government the moral right to so change the status of those public lands as to frustrate the purpose for which the State was Ought it to do it?

I will instance a case. Suppose the Government, immediately upon the admission of this State, had withdrawn all lands permanently from settlement or sale under any law. Would it have been within the spirit of the act creating the State on an equal footing with the other States that the Government should have done that; that it should have said by that act, "You will never grow larger than you are, and if you increase in population it shall be only through the medium of a division of existing holdings?" Would the Government of the United States Would the Government of the United States have a right to do that after having created a State?

Did not the Government say to the State when it created it: "We give you the benefit of our cooperation through development, whether by sale or otherwise, under the existing laws or the laws that shall be an improvement upon them and that shall not repeal them; we give you the right and the opportunity of growing in population, in wealth, and in greatness? Is not that the spirit of the law which creates a State? seems to me when a State is to be created upon an equal footing with the original States, upon which there were no restrictions, that must be true. Then, Mr. President, if it be not true, the State might be confined to the limit of its condition at the time of its admission?

The Senator from Wisconsin speaks of his experience in the State of Wisconsin in dealing with forests. How would it strike the Senator if it were proposed to retake possession of these forest lands that have been denuded and create forest reserves, cover them with the restrictions that are thrown around the forest reserves under existing laws, reforest them by planting trees upon them, and let Wisconsin wait for the further development that would naturally result from the settlement and development of those lands until the trees grew? I wonder if that would meet with the approval of the Senator from Wisconsin. There are vast areas of land—for I have seen them—in the State of Wisconsin that were formerly heavily covered with timber. The trees were converted into farmhouses and barns and fences and railroads and cities, and you You can not have those things and have the trees, too, any more than you can have the cake and the penny at same time. That has been true from the beginning

I wonder what would have happened had the Chief Forester of to-day been one of the Pilgrim Fathers when the Mayflower landed on the coast of New England. The first thing he would have done, or old Governor Carver, who, I believe, was the leading spirit at that time, would have done, would have been to create a forest reserve covering New England, have forbidden anyone to acquire title to the land, and have said: "You can live in the regions adjacent to this timber, and we will sell you what timber you want; we will give you free timber up to a certain extent, but you must not hope to become the owners of the soil." What would have happened? Because we know that What would have happened? Because we know that New England, as the historian tells us, was one unbroken forest, and we have only to look at it to-day to ascertain that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have been pretty thoroughly over the State which the Senator from Idaho refers to-the State of Wisconsin-and in answer to the Senator's question to the Senator from Wisconsin, which, of course, the Senator from Wissin is much more able to answer than I am, I can state from my own personal observation that all the farmhouses and all the towns and all the cities of that magnificent American Commonwealth could have been built with a small fraction of the timber that has been ruthlessly taken from those now almost desolate places; and if the Senator states that that forest, consisting now of those almost limitless acres of melancholy spaces, has gone into the farmhouses and towns of Wisconsin, I can tell him that I think the Senator from Wiconsin will agree that it has gone all over the country and all over the world, and the results of it have gone into the pockets of some men who are enormously rich.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Indiana for the suggestion, because the idea carries further, goes perhaps beyond the limits of the State of Wisconsin, and, perhaps, had it not been for those forests, that great city of Chicago, at the foot of the Lake, might not have been built. There must be great cities built outside of the forests and outside of the timber limits of the country, that must draw upon those forests for that purpose, and there are untold millions of feet of lumber from the forests of Wisconsin and Michigan and Minnesota, and perhaps Canada, and Indiana and Illinois in the great buildings of Chicago.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, Chicago is built of stone and steel and brick.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am astonished that the Senator should interpose such an objection as that. I knew Chicago when it was built of wood.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But that Chicago was burned down. Mr. HEYBURN. That was burned down, but it does not alter the fact that there must have been a Chicago to burn and that there were people who lived there and made their homes there and reared their families there for half a century before it was burned. Simply because the city was burned down does not change the argument or the conclusion; and even in the iron and brick city of Chicago there is to day used over a hundred million feet of lumber. The suburbs of Chicago are built of lumber. The interior of the buildings, as suggested to me by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] are built of lumber. I only give Chicago, however, as an instance. All up and down that section of the United States the towns and hamlets and villages and farms represent what were once trees and forests that have left their unsightly stumps upon the ground. The other day I passed through a city in the State of Wisconsin bearing the name of the distinguished Senator from that State, and I saw all around it the remnants of what had recently been a forest, and I saw amid these remnants little gardens, with green vegetables growing, and little farms and little orchards and prosperous homes, with houses painted white and blue and green, and looking as cheerful and promising for a great civilization as this section of country looked in the days when they first undertook to lay out the city of

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Washington.

Mr. HEYBURN.
Mr. SPOONER.
How recently was that?
Mr. HEYBURN.
Mr. SPOONER.
Before the snow?
Mr. HEYBURN.
Oh, yes; I have been here since the snow.
Mr. SPOONER.
I wondered if the snow had gone.
Mr. HEYBURN.
No, no, Mr. President, I think that statement will have to stand. The Senator has not interposed a I have been through the place often and always looked at it with interest because of the distinguished name it bears. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. SPOONER. I am glad, Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly, Mr. SPOONER. I am glad that I have been of any benefit whatever to the little town which bears my name, with the naming of which, however, I had nothing to do.

Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I understand him to have abandoned his contention that the Government of the United States as the proprietor of land in a State has not the same right as an individual proprietor to sell it, to lease it, or to refuse to sell it or to lease it, and that his argument now is based—and upon that we are in accord—upon a moral proposition, and that having created the Territory of Idaho into a State, as Wisconsin Territory was created into a State, the Government is under moral obligation to treat its lands in Idaho as it treated its lands in other States. That is not what is meant by equality among the States or their being upon the same footing as the other States. What is meant by that—and it is a customary formula—is not to minimize the power of the Government or its discretion and policy as to the disposition of its lands within a State, but it is to secure equality in law and in its relation to the Union with each of the States. It is to imply that no State in its sovereignty, a sister member of the Union, shall be below any other State. That is all, if the Senator will permit me a moment

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. That is all it means. It does not touch the question which the Senator is discussing.

Mr. President, it would have been infinitely better for the State of Wisconsin and for the people of Wisconsin if the Government of the United States in the old days had withheld from sale the large tracts of Government land bearing forests. The Senator from Idaho speaks of that little town. Forest fires, that to-day as to Government land would not occur, destroyed the timber for miles around that little town. Once a forest fire in Wisconsin was so frightful in its devastation, so akin to the common notion of hell in its destruction of men, women, and children, and homes, so costly in life and property as to stagger almost the sense of humanity because of careless ness and neglect in the cutting of timber. To-day our forests are denuded. Your State has been treated as my State was treated as to the public lands. The Government may learn something in the management and administration of its property, as individuals learn something, by the lapse of years and with observation and experience.

Idaho was not forced into the Union by Congress; Idaho asked to come into the Union—her people did—as the other States have petitioned to come into the Union. Has the Congress of the United States, in admitting Idaho into the Union, been less generous to Idaho in grants out of the public domain than she was to Wisconsin or Michigan or any of the older States? You have, how many millions of acres in the heart of this forest reserve in Idaho-1,000,000 acres?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Where did you get it?
Mr. HEYBURN. The land was there.
Mr. SPOONER. Of course the land was there.
Mr. HEYBURN. And the people found it there, and people constitute a State and not land.

Mr. SPOONER. But the people of Idaho did not own that nd. That land was owned by the people of Wisconsin, the people of New York, the people of all the States, and the Government of the United States, represented by Congress, gave that land to the State of Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. The people of Idaho were a part of the Government that did it.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the people of Idaho give it to them-

Mr. HEYBURN. They were a part of the Government that gave the land to the State of Idaho, because the people constitute the country.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but the people were not represented in Congress with votes until Idaho was admitted into the Union as a State

Mr. HEYBURN. They were represented—Mr. SPOONER. By a Delegate.
Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. With no vote. Mr. HEYBURN. With no vote.

Mr. SPOONER. That Delegate could not vote to dispose of an acre of public land, but the Government of the United States, representing all of the States, with Senators and Members of the House of Representatives who had votes when Idaho was admitted into the Union, carved out of the public domain belonging to all the people this million acres of land and gave it, as it had been given to other States in lesser quantities, to the State of Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
Mr. SPOONER. Now Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER, I will be through in a moment. I am going Mr. HEYBURN. I am sorry for that.

Mr. SPOONER. I love to hear the Senator speak, but I do not intend to be beguiled into interrupting him again. But, Mr. President, does the fact that the Congress of the United States granted the petition of Idaho to be admitted into the sisterhood of States bestow upon her this million acres of land out of the public domain, owned by all the people, constitute a moral obligation upon the part of the Government to turn over eighteen million or more acres of the public domain covered by forests to spoliation?

Mr. HEYBURN. No.
Mr. SPOONER. To the destruction of the water supply; to the interruption of the great work of irrigation. If it were not for Jacksons Lake and Buffalo Creek and Atlantic Creek and other streams of the sort, fed by the snows, protected on the hills by the trees, 1,200,000 acres in Idaho would not be susceptible of irrigation. That water supply, a good part of which comes there from the conservation of the water supply of the surrounding country, keeping the snow under the trees as long as possible, helps Idaho.

This matter of forest reserves, while it is of great benefit in the long run to Idaho, helps other States; helps even remote The destruction of the timber at the headwaters of the Mississippi River, in the State of Minnesota, had such an effect upon the water supply for the Mississippi that the Government appropriated millions of dollars to establish a reservoir system up in that region, which proved a failure and had to be abandoned. Of course, I can understand the point of the Senator from Idaho. You want taxable values in your State, Mr. HEYBURN. And people.

Mr. SPOONER. And you want people in your State; but is there not, my good friend, a little danger, if this policy were abandoned as to Idaho, that in more ways than one you would sacrifice the future to the present?

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President-

Mr. SPOONER. I will not interrupt the Senator again.
Mr. HEYBURN. At the price, I would rather be interru At the price, I would rather be interrupted than to have the Senator leave the Chamber, as he suggested, because it has been my misfortune on occasions that the Senator was only here a part of the time and only heard a part of the presentation of the ideas which I have undertaken to make to the Senate. Of course I realize that the Senator can not always be here, but I do not like to have him make so strong a presentation of his view in the case, as he has made in the last few minutes, and go away with it unanswered, because—
Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Mr. SPOONER. Let me say two things to the Senator. First, I have never left the Chamber when the Senator was speaking unless I was obliged to do so.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no doubt of that.
Mr. SPOONER. I have been a fairly good listener.
Mr. HEYBURN. I was not complaining about the

I was not complaining about the Senator. Mr. SPOONER. I am obliged to leave in a moment; but I want to state to the Senator that in my absence, if there was anything of argument in my observations, he can answer it and convince the Senate. I speak only my own view, and if I remained in the Senate the Senator from Idaho would not expect to change my views.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, I am not presumptuous enough to expect to change the Senator's view based upon a complete understanding of the matter.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator often has changed my view. Mr. HEYBURN. That is a very great compliment to myself. I am discussing something that I might say, without fear of being thought presumptuous, I know more about than does the Senator from Wisconsin, because I know more of Idaho and of the conditions there, and of its timber and of its streams and its climate and its possibilities and its people, than any man who knows it only as he sees it on a pleasure trip or a hunting trip or passing through it for business purposes. I have studied every feature of it.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I desire to say a word in regard to the question of the water supply. To a man who knows it as I know the Snake River and its tributaries—talk about Jacksons Lake being the source of the water supply, talk about the conservation for the arid regions of water by forest reserves, when the very first reserve that was created, and, I think, perhaps the largest in area in the State, does not cover an inch of water that flows into an arid region at all, but covers a region that has more snow than the people want. If you can devise a plan to get the snow out of there thirty days earlier in the spring, you will add immensely to the wealth and welfare of the country.

Mr. President, I have often heard these theories in regard to the conservation of the water supply. I have lived too long in the forests and among them not to know the conditions. I know it is written in the books, and it is believed by those who have no opportunity to know better, that the trees are great Mr. President, the flowers are bloomconservers of the snows. ing in the spring in the forests when the bare mountains are covered with glaciers of ice and snow. The snow amid trees falls, sifting lightly down through the branches and lies lightly on the ground, and when the rains come, as they always come along in the spring, and drop from the trees, they honeycomb the snow, and you get up some morning and it is gone, swept down the valley out of the forests; and then you can go up onto the bald mountain tops and walk over solid glaciers of ice and snow that will remain there, some of them, the year around, and some until the dog days of August. I am speaking from experience, and I know.

In 1884, when I was living in a camp down on the foothills, covered with fine timber in those days, on the 3d day of July the gardens were growing, vegetables were fit to eat, and I started for Murray, where I then got my mail and the Congressional RECORD, because it was during the days when the Congress held that famous special session; and, Mr. President, when I went up onto that ridge and followed it up and up and up, I traveled for miles over glaciers that remained there until the snow came again in the fall. I went down the other side into the head of Cedar and Granite Creek and saw the flowers blooming all around me and down to the town of Murray, then the center of that great mining country, which is the greatest in the

Mr. CARTER. Be careful there.

Mr. HEYBURN. Which is the greatest in the world, because it produces more than half the lead in the United States and Which is the greatest in the world, because one-third of the lead of the world. I went down into that valley, and I found them enjoying summer time, and that was one of the most densely wooded countries I ever saw in my life, with cedar trees from 8 to 12 and 13 feet in diameter.

Mr. PERKINS. Not so big as the California trees. Mr. HEYBURN. No. You have big trees in California. The Senator knows about that. I except California. Besides, I am speaking of conditions as I know those conditions, and it does sometimes stir me up when I hear men talking about the necessity for preserving the forests in order to conserve the water. If the forests and water were recent inventions, there might be something in it; but the forests have been there since the dawn of creation, and they will be there, subject to the necessities and use of man—they will be there when the memories of this generation will be very dim on the pages of history. But in their place

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

Mr. HEYBURN. Just one moment, until I finish a thought in my mind—but in their place will be those great concentrating mills, those splendid cities and homes, not only in and among the forests, but out on the neighboring plains, in the wheat fields, and the orchards—they will be there and the new growth of timber will be there.

In our country timber adds 8 per cent every year to its volume. That is the estimate of forestry in our country. Every year it has grown and added to its growth one-eighth. So that the age of the growth of trees has not passed, and when we have used the timber of this day we need not despair that there will not be other timber. I am not in favor of denuding the forests, but I would trade the best tree on earth for one onehundredth part of a man; I would trade the best hundred acres of the best timber in the world for one farm, with its buildings and its orchards and its family. When the Government sells timber, that is the end of the bargain, but civilization is a growing proposition. Each generation adds to the one before it. That is the difference.

What we want in Idaho is to reserve the timber. citizenship in Idaho that is better capable of doing it than you can select from the best centers of the East. Tell me that a young man fresh from college, with a diploma in his hand that says he excels in the classics and in literature and in mathematics, knows more about the growth and preservation of timber than that stalwart citizenship that has lived among the tim-ber all of its life and has preserved it and has not destroyed it.

I know from experience that they are the best guardians and protectors against fire in the world. I have seen those old frontiersmen go into the timber when the fire started and put it out according to their rules, not the rules written in this Use Book, but according to the rules of common sensethey put the fire out. They do not want to burn up the forests. do not want to cut a tree. They are not so fond of work that they want to cut a tree for the purpose of destroying it. They will cut it for the purpose of making a fence or a house or for some useful purpose or to build fires in their homes, but they do not go out like a lot of brigands and cut the trees down for the fun of it. You might imagine that they are outlaws; that they have no regard for the rights of other people. You forget that they are citizens of this country, and that many of them went from the East to that land.

They did not go there for the purpose of destroying it; they went there for the purpose of inhabiting it and making it a rival of this land.

There are better homes in that country on the average than in any other frontier country that ever existed. They do not build them the day they go there. They will go to a cedar tree at the season when they may do so and skin the bark off of it and make themselves a shack and occupy it until they have time to build themselves a house. I have slept under the bark of a cedar tree, because it was more convenient to do it than it was to build a house until I had determined where I wanted to build a house. Under this regulation a man may not use the forest for that purpose. He may not inhabit it at all, except by the grace of a forester.

Who are these foresters? I will not deal in names, but I saw them last summer-foresters on the pay roll of the Government, living at one of the hotels in one of the big cities in our country; a forester with a uniform peculiar to his occupation. It was stated in the paper that it was contemplated, and the rules formulated for, uniforming the foresters all over the country with a pale-green uniform, like those that you see in the forests of Germany, with a hat pinned up at one side, with a bugle as they have in Germany, that he might wind it and call to himself other foresters with the hounds and the dogs. Is there anything American about that kind of a system? That is what it will come to. Mark my words, inside of the next five years they will uniform those foresters, if Congress continues to forget itself, because I heard it discussed among them, and I know what their idea was. I think.

Mr. President, I merely wanted to call attention to the relation which these forests bear to the people, and I want Congress to forget the idea which they seem to entertain that we are not competent for self-government. In the name of all that is sacred, why did you create the State of Idaho if it was not competent for State government? Did you create it as a plaything for Congress? Suppose the same rule had been applied to the State of Indiana or Illinois in regard to their timber lands, and you had made permanent forest reserves. Man has always settled in the forests in every new land on earth. He seeks the trees and their shelter and the opportunity for fuel and for home making always. The plains are the last part of the earth settled. That has been true since the beginning of time.

Lowell, speaking of it from a New England standpoint, having in his mind the conditions that have always existed, states it "The settler's ax and the builder's trowel are seldom wielded by the selfsame hand."

The pioneers of the frontier, as a rule, have not been young They have been old men or men past the prime of life, men who had failed somewhere and who went there to start again. The life of those old ploneers covered a short period only, but the sturdy sons who followed them built the homes that marked the country for civilization. I remember when I was a small boy hearing it said that Iowa would be a splendid State if they could only raise corn in it. The early settlers in Iowa were forced to the conclusion that the country would not permit the growth of corn because of the frost that happened to be there at that particular season early in its settlement.

Let the people of the State estimate it and estimate its pos-Let the people of the State have a voice in these things. If you want to make forest reserves in California, I will vote with the Senators from California and every other Senator who will support it to make as many forest reserves as the Senators from California think should be made. Senators from Montana, knowing the State as they do, want forest reserves, I will support them. But when the Senators from Idaho tell you, as my colleague told you last evening, that they are making forest reserves where there are no forests, when I speak as I do the sentiment of the people of the -because the house of representatives of the legislature of Idaho during this week passed a resolution, with only four dissenting votes, indorsing, with a full knowledge of what it was, my course upon this question in the United States Senate—I say when we come to you for relief against this op-pression, this blight, we are entitled to it. We are entitled to be heard.

When the State of New York comes to the Senate and says they need a harbor 40 feet deep at some particular point, the western Senators do not quibble and say, "Well, it may be that this ought to be 30 or 29 or 15." We say the Senators from New York represent the people of that State, and we take their judgment. Or in regard to any other question affecting the use and development of the natural resources of a State we stand and should stand for the sentiment as represented by those who express it.

I have here, as I stated the other day in my remarks, the sworn statement of the Chief Forester that he has included within the forest reserves 30,000,000 acres which have no forests on them. Thirty million acres! It is a State; it is an empire; it is bigger than half the kingdoms and empires in Thirty million acres with no timber, but grazing land, and without Congress ever having authorized it. I find this Use Book full of rules and regulations in reference to grazing. For whom are you preserving these things in Idaho? The future generations, the Senator from Wisconsin says. There will be no future generations if you starve the present generation. There will be no future growth if you stop the settle-ment of the land. It will only remain for those who are there to divide up their holdings and divide them up again, which adds but little to the growth and prosperity of a State

During the last decade Idaho gained more in population than any other State in the Union in per cent. The people had settled right up to the margin and over into what are now forest reserves, and were pushing their lines forward, not to steal the land. I get tired of hearing this talk about graft and the stealing of public land. It is the individual effort to find a home and settle there, and they call that stealing it. He may not proceed according to the rule and the letter of the law in his attempt to acquire title; perhaps he does not; but that is a matter for correction and not punishment. They have indicted a half a dozen men in Idaho for unlawfully acquiring public lands or for acts in connection with the acquiring of public A half a dozen men out of 300,000 good citizens! yet they would say this is a reason why we should stop the settlement of these lands.

The pioneers are of a high average of integrity and honesty, and always have been. They were in Illinois. Men boast of their descent from the pioneers. They were in New York. The men who settled on Manhattan Island are the boast of those who have descended from them. They were honest men. They were not all honest men. They had their stocks and their gallows and their whipping post in those days and in larger measure and larger percentage than they do now. You might imagine from the discussion you have heard of this question and from what we read in the papers that there was never any necessity for a prosecuting attorney or for a jail or for gallows until the new States were created in the West. Those instrumentalities have existed all the way from the plains of Asia through to the Pacific Ocean on the march of civilization.

The percentage of good men now is greater than it ever was before. The men of the West are picked men. The drones do not reach that country. The men who have settled those new States are distinguished for their energy and their probity. They leave their doors unlocked at night and in daytime out there, and they are not troubled as to the honesty of their neighbors; and yet because forsooth a few men without conscience have violated or attempted to violate the law, all of that great citizenship is to be condemned and branded as incapable of self-government, not to be trusted in the performance of the duties that devolve upon it, not to be believed under oath.

A new rule for the establishment of facts must be adoptedthat of inspection; inspection by men not under oath; inspection by men who make unsworn reports against the testimony under oath of citizens who are up to the highest standard of American citizenship. That is the condition we are confronting. It is because we are up against these things that we presume to occupy the floor of the Senate and its time and attention during the discussion of these measures that dare not come into the Senate openly. These measures for further encroaching upon the rights, hampering the growth, stifling the industries, dare not come up here by the way of that desk, open and aboveboard. Of course I do not mean by this to imply any wrong motive or action on the part of any Senator in charge of a bill or any committee, but I am speaking of the system and of a method, and in the exercise of the high duties which devolve upon us in this body it behooves us at times to take stock of ourselves and of our methods.

I say if this legislation had come before us as an independent measure proposing to do what it has done from time to time it never would be enacted into law. It was dragooned through because it was a part of a general appropriation bill, and when you oppose it you are met with the sentiment, Would you stop the wheels of Government merely because this little provision does not please you?" So we claim the indulgence of the Senate for what may seem an overpersistence in pressing these objections upon its attention.

I regret that it is necessary to take up the time of the Senate and delay the final consideration of the appropriation bill in order that we may enter our final and strong protest against the class of legislation which is represented by the forestry provisions of this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator from Idaho takes his seat I wish to ask him a question merely for information.

The Senator has made a statement to me very startling. statement, if I understood him correctly, was that the tracts held as forest reserves would, if they were denuded of their timber, reforest at the rate of about 8 per cent a year. In other words, if to-day all of the available timber was taken from those forest reserves, in twelve and a half years there would be the same number of millions of feet of lumber in trees upon the tract as there is to-day. If that is true, it certainly puts an entirely different phase upon this whole question.

The Senator's argument also, it seems to me, if it establishes anything, establishes the fact that it is absolutely unnecessary to have a forest reserve in the State of Idaho for the purpose of conserving the water supply; that there would be no conservation of the water supply by reason of the conservation of Right here is the other proposition I wish to submit to the Senator, if I may put the three propositions to him. He said about 30,000,000 acres which are not actually forest lands are held under the forest-reserve proposition. If that is true, and if we come to the conclusion that it is necessary to have forest reserves, then why should not this whole bill be so amended that we would absolutely cut out every acre of land that will not of itself make a forest and a forest necessary for the preservation of the water supply?

So there are the three propositions: First, whether the forests, if denuded, will in twelve and a half years be reforested; secondly, whether it is necessary at all to have a forest reserve in order to conserve the water supply, and third, whether or not this bill could not and should not be so amended as to absolutely exclude all agricultural lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from North Dakota lays down rather an extensive subject for consideration, but I will try to answer it fully and yet briefly.

In the first place, the Senator from North Dakota misapprehended the statement that the accretion or growth of timber was 8 per cent a year. That is the growth in each tree. In other words, a tree will have 8 per cent more lumber next year than That is the growth in each tree. In other it has this. That does not mean that a tree growing out of the ground would grow to maturity in eight years.

The growth of a tree in my immediate section of the Stateand I have had excellent opportunity to observe it-is illustrated by this instance.

In 1883 the mountains lying back of Wallace were burned so that when you walked over the ground, as I did that fall and winter, the ashes would stick to your shoes. The next year that ground was covered with little trees coming up. They are red firs, tamaracks-what they call larches in the East-and pine trees. In 1884 that growth started. It is now a thick, well-set growth of trees running from 40 to 80 feet in height. You can estimate the growth of a tree from that instance. But the Sena-tor misapprehended the application of my statement as to the 8 per cent. Those estimates are made by men thoroughly acquainted with the process and the facts relative to the growth That is the first proposition.

The second proposition submitted by the Senator is as to the necessity of forest reserves to conserve water. of the conservation of water of course is emphasized because of the existence of the reclamation act. The reclamation act depends more upon water than it does upon money. It depends upon both of them, but water without money defeats the purpose of the act, and money without water would render the bill of no effect. You have to take both of those elements into con-If you should withdraw the land from settlement, sideration. when the fund is derived only from the sale of the lands, you If you destroy the water supply, which would starve the fund. is not possible, then the fund would be of no use.

North Idaho is not an arid country, and it is as big as several States in the Union. I live in that part of the State. North Idaho is in the humid region, where we need no irrigation, where we have too much water, where we have to-day on the level from 4 to 6 feet of snow; and yet they selected that as their first victim in the creation of forest reserves.

In south Idaho they have created forest reserves around the head of Lost River. Now I am talking about something in which my colleague is particularly interested. There is a reclamation withdrawal called the "Dubois tract" down there.

The forest reserves are over in north Idaho. The Salmon River flows down through the lower part of this heavy forest reserve, and the streams flow from the south into the Snake River. There is no land needing irrigation in that country. There is a natural rainfall quite sufficient for all purposes, and we raise from 30 to 50 bushels of wheat to the acre, averaging over immense areas every year. There are fine orchards, and the products of the vine and the soil are found in great quantities, and we have no reason to complain of the bounty of nature in any degree.

In south Idaho, in the section of country from which my colleague comes, they have created forest reserves largely on the headwaters of Lost River. Lost River never reaches any other river so far as we know. It is comprised of two branches Big Lost River and Little Lost River—and they flow through a beautiful country. The waters are taken out along the banks, to be used for local irrigation, and the result is that nice communities have grown up there. The water facilities can be immensely enlarged by damming and preserving that water. But the water does not go into the Snake River. Of course there are all sorts of theories as to where the water goes. It flows into a broken lava formation and disappears. You can hear it going down indefinitely. It may come out anywhere. It does not feed any river that flows into any reclamation project of the United States at all.

Now, the streams referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin exist more in the poetry of imagination than they do in practical every-day application. It is true that Henrys Lake is a splendid reservoir. Others could be created at the head of Snake River. But you will observe that the only forest reserve they have made up in that country is insignificant in size and area. It is the little forest reserve appearing here [exhibiting on map]. It is not as big as an ordinary township. they needed it they have not made it, and where they do not need it, they have made it. That is the condition. That answers the second problem.

We in Idaho are not in danger of drought. Under the Carey Act we have brought under cultivation two immense tracts of land which three years ago did not have an inhabitant on them, but were sagebrush plains, and to-day they resemble the old settled valleys of this country, with their good homes and farms. They raise wheat and vegetables and crops of every kind, and people have built a railroad 72 miles in length since two years and a half ago, because the country justified it, and they are extending the railroad and extending the reclamation project under the Carey Act, which, in my judgment, is quite as beneficent a law in its purpose and effect as the reclamation act.

Both of them are good. Mr. President, we have a vast quantity of water. As my colleague said yesterday, it is all in use. That is, he meant to say that wherever the lands have been prepared for its use and the canals constructed we are using it, but the water can be used over and over again, and we all know from experience that after three or four years of irrigation the land sends its waters back to the streams from which it came. We know that by experience. We have seen new country that would absorb a vast quantity of water for the first few years, and then after the ground became saturated and the surface covered with grass, trees growing, conditions changed, the land seemed no longer to be thirsty.

While we still use it in lesser quantities for irrigation, yet the quantity grows less and less. I know upon the banks of the Delaware River when I was a boy there were remnants of the old irrigation ditches that were taken out by the Swedes when they settled on the Delaware and they thought they had to irrigate the land, and those ditches remained there; growing more indistinct every year, until probably now they have been plowed up and passed out.

But this country changed—vegetation changed conditions, changed soil, and the necessity passed away. It will in that country. The great Twin Falls enterprise, which has created a city that has just been made the county seat of a new county and that has from three to five thousand inhabitants, is not three years old. There are other towns all along the line of the railroad. Those are settlements that have resulted from the use of the water, and that water passes back into the Snake River and is taken up farther down, and new communities grow, and thus it will ever be. But the forest reserves did not do that or have anything to do with it.

Mr. President, for whom are we saving this timber in Idaho, I repeat? Let this generation legislate for this generation and have some confidence in the generation to come being able to legislate for that generation. It reminds me of something we often see in life, a man wearing his life out in order that he may bequeath his sons a fortune ready made. It carries with it the implication that he has no confidence in his sons being able to take care of themselves. So it is with this proposition. This generation stands on the floor of the Senate and overlooks the members of this generation and their interest in this new country; it looks beyond them and sees only the generations of the future. Let us legislate for this generation.

Mr. President, I have said all I intend to say upon this question. I shall oppose this grazing proposition because it will re-It will result in the building up of the bigsult in a monopoly. gest and most vicious trust that ever existed in the United It will place one man in dominion over the largest area of land over which any single man ever ruled in what claimed to be a republic. It will give power and create expense and absorb the interests that belong to the public, and it will accomplish no good purpose.

I believe in free pasturage upon the public domain. in the homestead settler, whether it be under irrigation, under natural climatic conditions that need no irrigation, under dry farming, or under whatever conditions the settler chooses to submit himself to, being the final arbiter as to the choice and his election. I would give no man the right either to compel a settler to settle upon a given piece of land or to prevent him from doing so. I would punish the man who dares to violate the law in any regard in connection with obtaining title to the public domain or to the timber. I would punish in the criminal courts the man who would take advantage of the homestead law for the purpose of accumulating an undue proportion or something beyond that which the law gives him. I would punish the man who would violate the spirit and the letter of the stone and timber act or the desert-land act.

I have no sympathy with those who accumulate vast tracts of the public domain. I do not believe that any man should own a very large portion of that which should be held for the benefit of all the people. I believe in enforcing the law, but I do not believe in enforcing it by excluding that great population on the frontier from the benefits of and the right to use the public domain within the law and within the rights which the law has given them.

So I hope that the appropriation for the expanding of this system will not be included within the pending bill. I do not want to see such an appropriation of money as will enable the Forestry Service to further spread its blight upon that country. I do not want to see this appropriation increased so that they may carry out new plans of conquest, draw to themselves new sources of power, draw to themselves further rights to oppress and harass and defeat the just purposes and intent of the law in giving this bounty and this benefit to the people on the frontier.

Mr. BURKETT obtained the floor.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a notice?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly. Mr. PROCTOR. I do not wish to check a reasonable discussion of this subject, but there are many others to come up on the bill, and I wish merely to state that if the bill is not completed by 6 o'clock it will be my duty to ask for a night session to continue its consideration until it is completed. To-morrow, as Senators are aware, is to be devoted to other matters

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I wish to say in the beginning to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that I appreciate very keenly the position he is in with reference to this bill and the anxiety he must have to reach its final passage. I should not but for one reason, which I think will be apparent to every Senator here, take a single moment of the Senate's time. I would not do so if it were not for the fact that the amendment we are now considering to the bill as attached to it and brought in by the committee with some slight modification was originally introduced by me.

A year ago I introduced in the Senate a bill more in detail, but providing for the same ultimate object that this so-called "grazing amendment" to the pending appropriation bill proposes. About thirty days ago I recast somewhat that original bill and introduced it, and I also introduced a shorter bill, which is for practical purposes in identical words the amendment which we are now considering.

Inasmuch as for four or five days the proposition to undertake in some way under the law to handle the grazing lands of our country has been assaulted so vociferously by several distinguished Senators, it has occurred to me that it might not seem inappropriate to all Senators if I should consume a few minutes in trying to voice the ground of my faith in support of the measure which I introduced.

Let me say just a word in the beginning in response to the remarks the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn] made in closing, that they preferred not to be interfered with in handling the grazing lands or the timber lands, and also as to the theory which he advanced with reference to the control of these lands. This is a practical question and we must meet it as such. understand that no State, neither Idaho, nor Nebraska, nor Wisconsin, nor Iowa, nor any other State wants to have any considerable territory within its bounds that is not entirely under the jurisdiction of the State authorities, and is not contributing to the State and county and municipal treasury for the maintenance of government. Yet we know as a practical fact that almost every State has more or less of just such land as that. In my own State we have two or three Indian reservations. They are in the richest portion of the State of Nebraska; and one of the things we have contended with there has been the criticism and the complaint of the people in general in the vicinity of those Indian reservations that those Indian lands can not be taxed for the benefit of the State, the county, and the municipality adjacent to and in which they lie, notwithstanding they are the cause of a great deal of expense and litigation and some crime. But it is a practical fact. Complain of it as we will, find fault with it as much as we may, those Indian reservations are there and we must take care of them and meet the question in the best way that we can, and so we must approach this grazing-land problem.

I appreciate, as the Senator from Idaho and Senators from other States have said, that it is not a preferable thing, that it is not one of the things we desire, to have great tracts of land anywhere that are not under State control. And yet those mountains and those trees and those dry and arid lands are there, and the question is a practical one. How we are going to handle them to get the most benefit to the most people is the practical question that confronts the Senate.

In the State of Nebraska there are about 4,000,000 acres of these grazing lands, arid and semiarid, and in the whole United States it is estimated-I think the figures were given here before—that there are about 356,000,000 acres of them to-day scattered in the various States in the western part of the Republic. The question that confronts us is not altogether what Idaho wants or what Nebraska wants or what Montana wants or what any particular State wants, but, standing here as the arbiter for all those Western States, what we can do that will be for the highest welfare and the best use of that public domain to the people of the whole United States. So this grazing bill has been introduced, as I suggested.

Let me say also in passing that this is not a new proposition. It may seem to the Senate that suddenly, without warning, this matter of forest reserves and grazing lands has blown up and exploded itself right here on the Senate floor for the first time. But let me say that it is in the Senate to-day simply because it has been the subject of a mighty warfare that has been waged in the last seven or eight years throughout the Western States. Aye, it has been a warfare that has meant death to individuals, destruction to property and property rights, and the eternal ruination of men and the blasting of men's reputations throughout those Western States. It is here to-day not unexpectedly, but only as the legitimate result of the Government having three hundred and odd million acres of land out there over which it has exercised practically no control whatsoever, and has left it, so to speak, to be grabbed or to be appropriated by men out there who are just like men everywhere else, men who will grab and take that which is lying around loose unprotected and unguarded in any particular.

Let me say that when I came to Congress in 1898 I represented the southeastern seven counties of the State of Nebraska next to the Missouri River. There are not seven counties of better land anywhere in the world. It is just across the river from Iowa and Missouri. There is abundance of rain. The soil is rich and the land is all individually owned. There is not anything of this question pertaining to that district nor to the eastern portion of the State. Yet when we go one hundred miles or so farther west we also go almost half a mile up into the air, and we get into a portion of country where not alone on account of its longitude, but on account of its latitude, there is not enough rainfall to make it the agricultural land that prevails down in eastern Nebraska. It is not so desirable for homesteads; it is not so valuable for agricultural purposes or for anything as the eastern portion of the State; and there it has remained, a great public domain unasked for and uncalled for and unprotected from the onslaughts of the public as they might want to use it.

To show the Senate that this question has been before Congress and has been appreciated by the representatives from the western portion of the country for a long time let me call attention to this fact: During the last seven years I find that more than twenty bills have been introduced by representatives of Western States in Congress in some way or other trying to adjust and to get a method for handling the western grazing lands. I have in my hands fifteen different bills introduced by the representatives of eight different States of the Union trying to adjust the grazing-land proposition of the United States. One was introduced by a Representative from Texas, another was introduced by a Representative from Kansas, another was introduced by a former Senator from Nebraska, another was introduced by a Representative from Iowa, another was introduced by a Representative from one of the Dakotas, another was introduced by a Representative from California, another by another Representative from Nebraska, another by another Representative from Texas, another by another Representative from Iowa, in short representatives from eight different States; and I have been able to collect here fifteen bills that the representatives from those eight different States have introduced in Congress within the last six years to try to adjust the handling and the disposition of the grazing lands.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from Nebraska refers to bills introduced by Representatives who did not come from States where the grazing lands are located. I think he will admit that they did not come from the Representatives of the States containing the great majority of acres of the grazing lands. I simply interject that to show that no such effort has come from those where the grazing lands lie.

Mr. BURKETT. That is a very legitimate interjection, but let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Idaho. to that in just a minute with reference to my own State. I do not know that I blame a Senator from Idaho or a Representative from Idaho or any of these States for not introducing a bill here, and yet there is not anyone from any of those States who does not know that the present method of handling the grazing lands in every single one of those States is not satisfactory. In Idaho, in Montana, in Colorado, in Wyoming, in every one of those States there are almost as many different notions as to how you should handle them as there are big cat-tlemen and little cattlemen and sheepmen and homesteaders, and all other classes of people. It is a risky matter for any Representative of a State, divided in opinion as the people of all those grazing-land States are, according to the interests of the people, to undertake to be responsible for any particular kind of legislation; and yet the Senator will agree, just as the Senator's colleague [Mr. Heyburn] has stated, that the condition of the management of the grazing lands is very unsatisfactory to all the people in the State of Idaho.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly; for a question. I want to get through as quickly as I can.

Mr. DUBOIS. I do not want to disturb the Senator at all, and I merely wish to state further that with the exception, I think, of the Senator from Wyoming, the representatives of all those States have been opposed even to the turning of these lands over to the States, and if conditions are unsatisfactory they dread to have the power over these lands placed even in our own States by reason of fear of large ownership chiefly, and for other reasons, which I will not state.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not care to discuss particularly the wants of the sheepman or the wants of the cattleman or the wants of the little stockman or the big stockman or the homesteader, except just to show how men will differ and how they may change their opinions.

I remember six years ago sitting with a committee of which some Senators who are here present were members, to whom I am now looking, when the stockmen, the great cattlemen, the big cattlemen opposed any proposition looking to Government control of those grazing lands which charged them for the use of the land. To-day I think I can show that the great cattlemen are ready, willing, and anxious to have some sort of Government control. Now, why that change in six years? I will tell you. Six years ago those men had practically the entire range fenced up. They did not want any trouble made about the use of the grazing lands then. But in the last six years the Administration has waged an unrelenting war against the fencing of the great public domain; and to-day those cattlemen see exactly why the representatives from all over the West said six years ago, "You had better get yourselves into a condition where you can use those public lands within the law and not as outlaws."

Now, what is the result? Within my own State and within every other State in the West men who are as good as any men under the sun, men whose reputations have hitherto been unsullied, are to-day bowed down under the weight of an indictment, because they have been using these public lands outside of the letter of the law. They are criminals in the face of the

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURKETT. I do.

Mr. PATTERSON. Do I understand the Senator from Nebraska to say that the demand for legislation for the leasing of the grazing lands has grown up among the great cattlemen within the past six years?

Mr. BURKETT. I undertook to say and intended to say that six years ago (I will not be certain whether it was six, or seven, or five—in there somewhere) the cattlemen were opposed to the leasing proposition, and that to-day I thought the cattlemen's organizations were in favor of some sort of Government control, not leasing necessarily, but some control by the so far as the great cattlemen of my State are concerned, there has not been an hour in the last twenty-five years when they were not demanding a law that would lease to them or lease to cattlemen generally the public domain, demanding the right to put up fences in order that they might have the exclusive control over certain territorial areas that such a law would give them; and those who have been resisting their efforts have been the ranchmen, the men who combined farming with a little stock raising, as well as those who are denominated stockmen and those who are getting a start in the stock business and who realize and always realized that they would be driven out of business if such a system as this was inaugurated, as it would be impossible to prevent practically all of the lands within a reasonable space of time from falling under the control of a comparatively few great stock companies.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I do not think that is a very material point, whatever it may be. However, I made the statement, and of course it is entirely proper for the Senator to contradict it. If I had known that it would have raised any discussion I would not have made it, because I do not think it material in this particular. This amendment is to prevent a few men from getting control of that great domain. They had it a few years ago, and we want to prevent it now if we can. It is not material whether they did or did not want a leasing bill, or whether they changed their mind so far as the few words I am going to say are concerned. I want to say to the Senate I am not going to take long, because I am physically not able, having quite a severe cold, as well as on account of the State of business.

Now, Mr. President, I go on to finish my statement. That being not material, I will say, however, that I presume that the Senator from Colorado is correct in one way. I am very certain that I am correct still in another way. I think the cattlemen of the West did want and have wanted a leasing bill, but they never have wanted a leasing bill with the provisions in it that the present bill has and the bill I introduced in this body a year ago and another one a month ago, protecting absolutely, as it does, and saving unto the homesteader and the small cattleman the first right to use the public domain.

I think they would have been satisfied with some sort of a bill which would have allowed them, under the color of law, to have corralled within their fences these great tracts of western land unhampered and unassailed by the homestead law and the other laws that give individuals the right to go to that country and settle. We had the matter up a few years ago. Let me say that every time I have ever had anything to do with this sort of legislation I have contended and insisted that one of the things that must be in such a bill was, first, a provision to protect the working of the homestead law and to save to the homesteader the first right to the public commons. I appreciate just as much as the Senator from Idaho appreciates and just as much as all the people in every State appreciate that we want settlement; we want men and women; we want people in our States, and we had rather have that land settled up with homesteaders than to have it settled up with cattle grazing in great herds. But if we don't have homesteaders enough to use it all, then we want the rest cared for and used for the best interests of the most people. So it has been always difficult to get up any kind of a law looking to the control of these great tracts of grazing land, simply because the people were so solicitous and so fearful that something was going to be placed on the statute books that would retard immigration to their particular locality and that would in some wise interfere with the settle-ment and development of that State. They have also been They have also been solicitous lest a law should be made in the interest of the great cattle kings of the country.

Now let me say, Mr. President, there is another reason. noticed yesterday that some Senators introduced certain letters and telegrams from particular localities opposing this sort of legislation, yet I have telegrams and letters from only a short distance away from there indorsing in the most enthusiastic terms just exactly this kind of legislation, and we wonder why. Conditions are different. I have a letter from a western county of my State, a county through which flows the Platte River, a county every acre of which practically is susceptible of irrigation.

They are to-day building a great irrigating ditch; they know they are going to reclaim that land, and they know in that particular county they are going to settle a family on every forty acres of it. They write to me, and they say, "We do not want that sort of legislation; we are going to bring men and women in here, and settle that locality;" and there is not a word in this legislation—not one word—which does not permit a homeovernment.

Mr. PATTERSON. I simply want to say, Mr. President, that them. They do not need it, but there are other localities that So from one county and from another county, from one locality and another locality as the land differs-in one place it is sand hills, in some places it is level valleys, and all that sort of thing—they will object from this view point or that view point; but in this bill, if Senators will take it and read it, they will notice that there is every provision in it throughout the entire amendment to protect the homesteaders. Notice this provision on page 72:

Provided, That all leases or permits to graze issued under this provision shall be subject to the right of homestead or other settlement, location, entry, patent, or any other disposal of public lands under the public-land laws, and any appropriation so made shall operate as a cancellation of said lease or permit as to the land so appropriated.

Notice the next provision:

Provided further, That bona fide homestead settlers or residents shall be permitted to graze free of charge their stock used for necessary domestic purposes on the public lands affected hereby.

I have contended earnestly that the homesteader ought not to have to ask anybody's permission or to pay anybody for the use of the public domain. It is the cattleman, the man who is making that his business, that is contemplated in the provision

Now notice the next provise of the bill. Even if the land is taken by cattlemen this next section provides for taking it away from them as needed by the homestead settler:

And provided also, That preference shall be given to bona fide home-steaders and settlers in the allotment of an equitable proportion of range adjacent to their homes not later than the beginning of the next annual grazing period.

So that if a man goes and locates a homestead any time this year not later than the beginning of next year, the Department has got to reallot the grazing territory and give that homesteader as much land as he needs adjacent to his

Every provision in this bill specifically guards the right of the homesteader. The man we most want out on that land is first protected, and he is given the first opportunity to secure the lands.

As I said a moment ago, for six years this warfare has been waged out there. Aye, let me tell you it has been waged since longer ago than that. Senators will recall that there was a time when the great stories that were printed of the western country were stories of the cowboy and the outlaw, and those States grew up in the minds of a lot of people in the East as a wild, western, weird, outlaw country. Why? Because now and then there would come floating back some story, exaggerated usually, of the raids of the cowboys and the fights and the warfare that those cowboys had made on settlers. boys of one great cattle king were continually at war with the cowboys of another cattleman. You have not seen one of those when the man invented the barbed wire and when they began to make it at 3 or 4 cents a pound, and less than 3 or 4 cents, the barbed-wire fence drove the cowboy out of business on the western plains, and accordingly there has been none of the outlawry out there that we used to hear of. And let me say, as a matter of fact, that they never were as bad as they were pictured and painted. But there is nothing of that kind now.

What did that fencing do? It drove out the cowboy. But let me tell you it went there in the face of the law, because it was unlawful to fence up any of the public domain. It was tolcrated for a few years—for a dozen years, perhaps—but about six years ago the Administration said, "We are going to have the law obeyed; the mandate of the law must be fulfilled," and it said to those stockmen, "Yoù must take down your fences out on the public domain." The President was right, of course; the law should be obeyed, and he would be derelict in his duty if he did not enforce all the laws. The fences must come down unless the President's recommendations are enacted into law.

What will be the result? It means less cattle and poorer I did not intend to go into this sort of a speech, but let me tell you what it means and the effect it has had. Senators present can remember that formerly when they saw a train load of western cattle they saw more horns than they did cattle and that the horns were longer than the body of the animal. Now all that kind of cattle have been driven off the western plains. Do you know why? After the barbed-wire fence came out West they were able to take care of their cattle and grade them up better, to take care of the grass and feed them better, and to-day they have a grade of cattle out there equal to the grade of cattle raised in any State of the Union. But those fences have had to come down. As a result that great tract of almost 400,000,000 acres of land is lying there once more a prey to everybody who wants to grab onto it. Men are going to grab onto it. If somebody would go out here and scatter dollars in the plaza, you would find a lot of men here in Washington who would try to grab one of those dollars, some of them would try to grab two dollars, and some of them as many as they could. As long as that land lies there open to the grabbing of whoever may be able to get it, there will be grabbers out West who will take it; and there are men who will get it in the grabbing process who ought not to have it. It has been a long, hard effort for the President to get those fences down and to get the land restored once more to the public common; but it will not stay that way long unless this bill or some bill be passed putting somebody in authority over those lands to control their use and appropriation.

When you trust to the grabbing process there are going to be some men out there who will get more of it than they ought to have. Do you know, sir, that one man was punished under the grabbing process for having got his fences around a tract of country extending, as I remember, from the Northwestern Railroad on the north to the Burlington Railroad on the south, and from a town on the east to a place on the west about 55 miles? Under the grabbing process that individual became the absolute monarch, by the wire fence around it, of a part of the public domain 75 miles one way and 55 miles another.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] draws a pathetic picture and holds up his hands in horror for fear that we will create a great giant who will control the public domain of the United States, who will be more powerful than any king or potentate. But let me say that when he is doing it this officer that we create is our giant; he is acting for 80,000,000 people; he is acting under the direction of the law; he is drawing a salary from the United States to control that country; and I would rather have him the dictator over 400,000,000 acres of land than to have another man, working for his own selfish interest, prompted by his own selfish motives, control the land and put a barbed-wire fence around it, as was done in my State, 75 miles one way and 55 miles another way.

Sirs, it is not that somebody is going to control those lands; they are bound to do it. You can not put anything in this world anywhere that somebody will not control it and manage it and run it. The question with me is, am I going to advocate a proposition that will put a man representing the Government of the United States to run that public land and control it, or turn it loose, open to the grabbing, grasping, selfish hands of the men out there. You and I know that in the West, as in the East, it is the man with the most power; it is the man that has got the most money; it is the man who has got the greatest influence who will be able to control the largest portion of the public domain of the United States,

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly, I yield for a question. Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question. First, what would be the difference between having a lawless tract 50 miles in one direction and 50 miles in another, and having one under the authority of the law? Then, there is one other question I should like to direct to the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, and that is whether or not, if the Government pursues the policy that it is now ostensibly pur-suing, of forcing the great cattle barons to take down their fences, and if one-half of the eighty men in Nebraska who are now under indictment shall be sent to jail for unlawfully inclosing the public lands, does the Senator have any idea that any further efforts will be made in that direction? You can not fence the public lands and conceal it. It is not like stealing goods and then pawning or hiding them. All that has to be done in order to give big and little, rich and poor the same rights upon the public domain is in a dozen or more instances to enforce the law which punishes men for unlawfully fencing the public domain.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, after all, I surmise that the Senator is not advecating a proposition or opposing a proposition simply because it will put us in a position to send somebody, either a citizen of his State or mine, to the penitentiary. The first man whom we convicted out there, let me say to the Senator, was a citizen of Colorado and a constituent of the distinguished Senator who has just spoken. But that is neither here nor there.

Mr. PATTERSON. Just one moment, Mr. President. The only reason for that, if he was a citizen of Colorado—and I accept the Senator's word upon that proposition-was because the cattlemen in my State, as a rule, frown down on the inclosing of the public domain, although the law has been violated in some few instances, while the reverse seems to have been the general rule with the cattlemen in Nebraska. Of course they desired to go where they would be received with open arms and where they naturally supposed they would take the immunity

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that he is not right in either proposition he has made. His constituent came over to Nebraska because he could get better lands there than he could in Colorado. If the Senator wants me to be plain about it and tell him in public why the man came to Ne-braska, I will reply to him by giving a quotation from the chief justice of his own supreme court, to the effect that there were places in Colorado where they did not fence lands for the purpose of keeping anything in, but they fenced it to keep cows out, to keep them from starving to death. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator is mistaken in the State. That was up in the State of Vermont, and it is too great a jump for the Senator to take from the far East to the Middle West.

Mr. BURKETT. I quote it from Judge Elliott, of your own State supreme court, and I supposed it happened in Colorado.

But we are not advocating a proposition or opposing one, as I was about to say, either to send people to the penitentiary or to keep from sending them to the penitentiary. The facts are that the people of the West are going to use the public domain, and every man that is here, or anywhere else in the United States, ought to want the people to use the public domain to get homes out of it. That is proper; that is economical. We want them to do the best they can with it, and raise the most cattle they can, and to raise them the cheapest they can, because that is for the welfare of all of us who have to live down here in the East a while and buy beefsteak.

So we are not contending here for a proposition whether one man will be convicted and another turned loose. We are trying to pass through Congress a law that will permit those men legally to use the public domain in the most economical way and get the best results from it to the welfare and happiness of all the people of America. They may get a few of the people of Nebraska and Colorado into the penitentiary, but that does not adjust the more important question that we ought as a Congress, the guardian of those public lands, to institute some sort of legislation whereby the people can use those lands to the welfare of all the people of America.

As I was saying, this matter has gone on for years and years. Bills have been introduced. That it is important is indicated by the fact that every irrigation congress, every trans-Mississippi congress, every cattlemen's convention, every sheepmen's convention, every meeting of any considerable number of people in the Western States, have considered as one of the most important questions the proposition of how to handle these grazing lands.

The question came up when the original leasing bill was introduced. Go back six years and you will find it was a straight leasing bill at so much per acre. There were many difficulties in the way of that. One acre is not worth as much as another and could not be leased for as much. So there are inequalities in the system of leasing at so much an acre. In some places it takes 30 acres to feed one animal through a year and in other places it only takes 3. There were so many different conditions that you could not draw a specific piece of legisla-tion and make it fit all over that great public domain. So, as the result of the six or eight years of consideration of this question, it has finally been determined that if you do legislate, you have got to put it into somebody's hands to exercise a discretion, to regulate one community as that community ought to be handled and to handle another community as that particular community ought to be handled, and only placing in the law the more salient and important matters. So this bill was drawn, as I say, with the view of putting into the hands of somebody authority to go out there and control that western land.

Let me say when men were permitted to fence the public domain, or when they were permitted to herd their great droves of thousands and tens of thousands of cattle without any control, there was no chance for the small cattleman. There was little chance there for the homesteader who went out and settled on a piece of land in the midst of that prairie. A great reving herd of 25,000 cattle could sweep him down and eat him up as would a herd of locusts or grasshoppers. That was the condition before the fences came. The fences did not improve the condition much—in fact they were worse in some localities. The homesteader then was likely to be inside the fence and nobody to protect his interests. Those fences were there against the law. The builders of the fences were outlaws, so to speak. There was nobody out there to protect either them or the homesteader, and they could drive Mr. Homesteader out, and of course he did not find it practical or congenial to settle within one of those great pastures.

What is the object of this bill? It is the object to put some man with the authority of Uncle Sam, strong and as powerful as Uncle Sam's Army—and Navy, too, if he could get it out there in that country—to go out there as a great national arbiter to stand between the big man and the little, between the cowman and the sheepman, between the cattleman and the home-steader, and to say what is right between man and man, and to see that individual rights are recognized. That is what the people of those communities want and ought to have.

I am not quarreling whether it shall be the Forester or not. I am not quarreling whether it will be Mr. Pinchot or not, but let me tell you why I did put the control in the Department of Agriculture. Six years ago they made 90,000 acres in Nebraska into a forest reserve. They are growing pine trees on it. Two years ago I visited that little forest reserve of 90,000 acres. It was right in the midst of the row at the time when they were convicting somebody for illegally fencing part of the public domain within 20 miles of where I then stood. That forest reserve of 90,000 acres was being handled as smoothly and as expeditiously and as judiciously, I may say, and so fairly as to meet with the approval of everybody in that community, so far as I could find out. I asked the man there in charge of the forest reserve, "How is it that you do it? How can you handle these 90,000 acres, while right over across the way they are having trouble and lawsuits and criminal prosecutions?" He explained to me the procedure, which was that of the Forestry Service of the Agricultural Department, and from that time on I began to wonder why it was not possible to handle the grazing lands of this country just as nicely and as harmoniously as they have handled these 90,000 acres within that timber reserve. The result was that last year I was glad to introduce this bill providing for that.

I am not haggling over the control going to the Agricultural Department. I think that the Secretary of Agriculture and his assistants will always be more solicitous than the employees of any other Department about the development of agriculture and of the homestead settlement of the lands of that country. The men under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, in my judgment, will be always a little more solicitous for the homesteading and settlement of the public domain than the men in any other Department. So, in my judgment, it is better to have the handling of these grazing lands under some bureau of the Agricultural Department than to handle them through any other Department of the Government. But let us go a step further in the development of this subject. After all these years of discussion and after all the abuses that have grown up under "no administration" of those lands, it is apparent to everyone that something should be done. There have been all sorts of meetings held to formulate plans and, as I have shown, there have been all sorts of bills introduced into Congress. In short, there has been plenty of fault-finding, plenty of talking, but no results. The importance of the question and the necessity that something must be done has impressed the present distinguished occupant of the White House until it has called from him two recent communications to Congress. In his message of last December he called attention to the facts and the conditions and recommended that a bill be enacted which would provide for Govmended that a bill be enacted which would provide for covernment control of the public range through the Department of Agriculture., I will not read it all, but will ask permission to incorporate it as part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The matter read and referred to is as follows:

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF GRAZING.

The matter read and reterred to is as follows:

Government control of grazing in the national forests is an assured success. The condition of the range is improving rapidly, water is being developed, much feed formerly wasted is now saved and used, range controversies are settled, opposition to the grazing fee is practically at an end, and the stockmen are earnestly supporting the Forest Service and cooperating with it effectively for the improvement of the range.

The situation on the open Government range is strikingly different. Its carrying capacity has probably been reduced one-half by overgrazing and is still falling. Range controversies in many places are active and bitter, and life and property are often in danger. The interests both of the live-stock industry and of the Government are needlessly impaired. The present situation is indefensible from any point of view, and it should be ended.

I recommend that a bill be enacted which will provide for Government control of the public range through the Department of Agriculture, which alone is equipped for that work. Such a bill should insure to each locality rules for grazing specially adapted to its needs and should authorize the collection of a reasonable grazing fee. Above all, the rights of the settler and home maker should be absolutely guaranteed.

Much of the public land can only be used to advantage for grazing when fenced. Much fencing has been done for that reason, and also to prevent other stock owners from using land to which they have an equal right under the law. Reasonable fencing, which promotes the use of the range and yet interferes neither with settlement nor with other range rights, would be thoroughly desirable if it were legal. Yet the law forbids it, and the law must and will be enforced. I will see to it that the illegal fences are removed unless Congress at the present session takes steps to legalize proper fencing by Government control of the range. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 17, 1906.

Mr. BURKETT. And also, Mr. President, I want to read and incorporate a portion of the message which the President sent to us on the 13th of February last upon the same subject. Only ten days ago the President has again called the matter to our attention.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to from the President's message is as follows:

PUBLIC-LAND SITUATION IN THE UNITED STATES.

The matter referred to from the President's message is as follows:

PUBLIC-LAND SITUATION IN THE UNITED STATES.

Let me also again urge that legislation be passed to provide for Government control of the public pasture lands of the West on the same general principles which now apply in the Government control of the forest reserves. The local control of the range should be in the hands of western men familiar with stock raising, and there should be full local participation in the management of the range; for cooperation between the stockmen and the Government officers is absolutely essential. The grazing fee should be small and at first almost nominal. There is no need at present that the Government should get an et revenue from grazing on the public range, but only enough to pay for administration and improvement, and it may be wise to provide that any surplus shall go to the States and Territories in which the fees are collected. If a law for the control of the range should, as I request, be enacted, such control would not be taken hurriedly, but gradually, as grazing districts can be organized. The one prime essential in the policy of range control must be to protect the homestender in his right to create a home for his family. The right of the homestender, of the home maker, of the actual settler on the land, must always be paramount, and he must have whatever range privileges are necessary to his purpose. At present it is unlawfull to fence the public domain. All fences unlawfully maintained will have to be taken down. Unless Congress takes action to legalize reasonable and necessary fencing through Government control of the range, there will be serious loss to stockmen throughout the West, and this loss will often fall hardest on the small man; for in many cases the stock business can not be conducted without fences. Yet it would be grossly improper to provide for the continuance of all fencing; whether beneficial or harmful, but a proper discrimination between the two classes, a discrimination to be exerc

Mr. BURKETT. So, as I say, the matter has reached the President. The President, acting in conjunction with live-stock associations and agricultural associations, some time ago appointed a commission to consider this entire subject and to report and recommend proper legislation. I have here, Mr. President, the report of the commission that was sent to the President of the United States only a few days ago, and I ask that the Secretary may read that report of the commission, composed of representatives of these various organizations, together with three men appointed by the President himself, to take up this whole matter and make some recommendation to him as to the sort of legislation which should be had.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the PRESIDENT

We, your special committee appointed to meet and confer with the Public Lands Commission regarding the questions relating to the most equitable and effective method of controlling, protecting, and improving the public range, beg leave to report that in accordance with your request we have met with the Public Lands Commission and also have appeared before the Senate Committees of Agriculture and Public

That as a result of the deliberations and discussions we have unani-mously approved and do support the attached measure, which will be reported by said Senate committee to the United States Senate for its action.

We believe, without a dissenting voice, that the passage by Congress of this measure will be of the greatest possible benefit to the live-stock interests, the bona fide homesteaders and settlers, and the entire country covered by the public lands of the United States.

We desire to thank you most sincerely, on behalf of the live-stock raising industry, which we represent, for your unwavering loyalty to us and our needs, and can assure you that in you the stockmen of the West feel they have a friend who is a friend indeed.

We thank you heartily for the honor you have conferred upon us by the appointment on this committee, and desire to say that we will do our utmost to secure the passage of this measure in Congress, as well as to aid and assist in the carrying out of its provisions in the event of its becoming a law.

F. E. Warren; H. A. Jastro, Bakersfield, Cal.; Martin Garn, Sugar, Idaho; Dan P. Smithe, Pendleton, Oreg.; Wm. C. Barnes, Las Vegas, N. Mex.; F. M. Stewart, South Dakota.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, Mr. President, I have had that read so that the Senate may know and the country may understand the situation. I may say that those men, as I understand, represent all the conflicting interests among the stockmen in the They represent, as I understand, the homesteader and the cattlemen and the sheepmen. I have only the pleasure of knowing one of them. I never met but one of them, so far as I know, and his name, of course, is familiar to every man on this floor; but after giving the matter full discussion they have indorsed, in general, the proposition that is embodied in this amendment and that is now a part of the agricultural appropriation bill, the original of which I have heretofore introduced into the Senate.

I am not contending that this proposition is entirely perfect or that it will suit everybody. No legislation on this subject or any other subject will suit everybody or every interest. But I have introduced it with the belief that it is the best remedy for the existing evils and that it will suit more people than any legislation that has so far been proposed. Let me also state to the Senate that when I introduced this bill in the Senate I took occasion to write a letter to every newspaper man in the State of Nebraska-over 500 of them, Democrats and Republicans, big papers and little papers—to every newspaper man in my State I wrote a letter, and I inclosed him a copy of this bill, and I asked him to read the bill and then to give me his ideas upon it. I also added that I did not want to have any part in this character of legislation unless I believed it was right and would work for the interest of the country. I have received a good many replies.

I am not going to have them all read, but I received hundreds of replies from newspaper men and others who have read the bill, and some of the papers published the bill in full, and many people read it in that way, and in about seven-eighthsyes, nine-tenths—of the letters that I have received the writers indorse most enthusiastically this plan of handling the grazing lands of the West. Of the other eighth or tenth there is a portion that evidently, from their letters, had not read the bill when they wrote condemning the bill, because in their references to it they had not touched the bill from end to end or any of its provisions. So, I may say, that of all the newspaper men that have answered me only a very small proportion, indeed, have done other than speak of the bill in the most complimentary and satisfactory way.

Mr. President, I want to have read to the Senate a short let-ter from the president of the Nebraska Stock Growers' Association, who, by the way, is the State auditor of Nebraska and also secretary of the National Stock Growers' Association. His association considered the proposition. I ask the Secretary to read his letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. E. J. BURKETT, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I have just returned from the annual meeting of the American National Live Stock Association at Denver. The association passed a resolution without a dissenting vote indorsing your bill; while your special bill was not mentioned, yet every feature in the same was indorsed. There were representatives at the meeting from every State having grazing lands, who made talks favoring your disposition of the public domain. I am instructed by the executive committee of the Nebraska Stock Growers' Association to indorse your bill in every particular. This committee represents the largest association of stockmen in Nebraska. Later on, if you wish to meet any of the committee regarding this bill, advise me and we will be glad to meet with you. Please let me know if there is a possibility of your bill getting through Congress at this session.

Yours, very truly,

E. M. Searle, Jr.,

Secretary-Treasurer.

E. M. SEARLE, Jr., Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. BURKETT. I desire to have read now a communication signed by a great many citizens of Grand Island, Nebr., and sent to me, with reference to this proposition. I desire to say that I shall introduce a few of these letters and petitions, just as briefly as I can, so as to show to the Senate that while there may have been some letters sent here against this proposition, the great overwhelming sentiment of the people is in favor of and demands some kind of legislation. I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. E. J. Burkett,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned residents of Nebraska contiguous to the range country, while not directly interested in any part of the range country as owners or occupants of range lands, are familiar with the situation in the range districts, and favor some lease law that will enable stockmen to utilize the range country under such regulations as will prevent overstocking, keep out fires, and at the same time preserve such lands for future homestead settlers should they ever become fit for such use, and thus avoid the conflicts that have kept the country in a turmoil for years.

Mr. BURKETT. I now introduce and ask to have read a letter of three lines, signed by some forty citizens of Cherry County, Nebr., right in the midst of the grazing-land district.

Washington, D. C.

We the undersigned, representative stockmen, farmers, and citizens of Cherry County, Nebr., do hereby indorse your efforts in securing the passage of your bill to lease the public lands.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask to have read a short letter from the general manager of the Journal-Stockman, published in South Omaha, Nebr. The writer is in direct touch with more stockmen and farmers generally than any other one man in the West, I presume, and whose paper is probably in the homes of more people throughout the western country than any other paper of a similar nature.

The Secretary read as follows:

SOUTH OMAHA, NEBR., January 26, 1907.

Hon. E. J. Burkett, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I am sending you to-day under separate cover a marked copy of the Dally Journal-Stockman, containing the full text of the bill which you have introduced creating grazing districts, and editorial comment on the same. Your bill meets with my most unqualified approval, and I trust that you will succeed in making it a law, but I realize as well as you that it is a difficult matter to suit all parties concerned.

Thanking you for having sent me a copy of the bill, I remain, yours

JOURNAL-STOCKMAN COMPANY, A. C. DAYENPORT,
Secretary-Treasurer and General Manager.

Mr. BURKETT. I wish to have read a short clipping from the Omaha Bee, one of the great papers of the continent. This item reports a meeting of men of all parties, as those familiar This with the names of the editors of the great papers there will see, and gives the result of that meeting, which was held in Omaha almost a year ago.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Omaha Bee, February 8, 1906.]

BOOST FOR THE LEASE BILL-OMAHA COMMERCIAL CLUB PASSES RESOLU-TIONS PROPOSED BY CATTLEMEN OF WESTERN NEBRASKA.

A boost was given the movement for a proposed national leasing law Wednesday, when the executive committee of the Commercial Club passed these resolutions favoring leasing or sale of the public domain to the western cattlemen:

"Resolved, That the Commercial Club of Omaha, at a meeting called to consider the serious conditions confronting the cattle interests of the State, indorses the principle of disposing of the unoccupied public lands of northwestern Nebraska, popularly known as the "sand hills," by lease or sale, for cattle raising and grazing purposes; be it further "Resolved, That the need of some measure of this sort is urgent, and early action is most earnestly urged upon our representatives in Congress; be it further "Resolved. That such a measure, properly framed, will be in the interest not alone of the cattle industry of this State, which is now imperiled, but will bring relief to a large number of settlers in the region affected, in which confusion and uncertainty now prevall; be it further "Resolved. That it is the sense of this organization that a bill making provision for this emergency will not only greatly benefit the State, but will yield considerable revenue to the Government upon lands otherwise unoccupied and unmarketable."

State Representative Frank Currie and State Senator Reynolds appeared before a special joint session of the public affairs committee and the executive committee. They laid before the members the woes of the western Nebraska cattlemen under the present system and asked that the club take some action showing its sympathy with the cattle raisers. John Steel, A. C. Smith, E. Rosewater, G. M. Hitchcock, William A. Paxton, G. W. Holdrege, and C. F. Mctirew spoke on the subject, all of them favoring leasing except Mr. Rosewater, who thought it would be more practical for the Government to sell to the cattlemen land which is only fit for grazing.

A motion to send a representative to Washington to help the cattlemen was not received with favor. The committee was unanimous in its sympathy with Mr. Currie and his associates, and resolutions were drawn favoring leasing or sale of the public domain.

Mr. BURKETT. I wish to say in conjunction with that article that I presume it would satisfy more people and distinguished editor of that plant is a practically every man from the West does, and as I believe Mr. Rosewater did, the impossibility of getting through Congress a law to dispose of those lands by sale. I do not know, either, that I am one of those who agree with the proposition that it is best to sell them. In my judgment if they were to be sold, as much of them as there are, they would have to be sold very cheaply; and in my opinion it is better, perhaps, that the Government should hold the title to these 400,000,000 acres for future generations, controlling it in some other way, than to part with the title at present as cheaply as the Government would have to do under present conditions.

I ask to have read a short letter from the editor of the Tribune, at Crawford, Nebr., in the extreme western portion of the State, almost to the Wyoming line and in the midst of the grazing district. The writer has lived there a long time. He knows the country and he knows the conditions. Coming in contact as he does with all classes of people, his word is worth con-

Dear Sir: I send you under separate cover a copy of the Tribune with your bill published therein in relation to the grazing lands.

I consider the measure about as near the proper thing as can be arranged to make it satisfactory to the varied interests. I can not see where it can be improved.

Dear Sir: This answer in reply to your letter of January 18 may come too late, but permit me to say I heartily agree with your bill "providing for the control of grazing upon the public lands in the arid States and Territories of the United States," and trust it will be enacted into law.

Yours, very truly,

Mr. BURKETT. I desire to have read a letter from the editor of the St. Paul Republican, and I do so because he is in about the middle portion of the State and also because he is recognized in the State as one of the very strongest men of the State and the editor of one of the most important papers of State and the editor of one of the most important papers of the State.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. E. J. Burkett, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: I have your favor of the 18th instant, also a copy of your bill creating grazing districts. While I am just outside of the "cattle country," and therefore not as familiar with conditions as others whose opinions you will doubtless receive, I have long recognized the need of a law which would permit the stockmen to graze their herds on the public lands without laying themselves liable to Federal punishment. From a hasty reading of your bill, I am inclined to believe that it covers the ground with a reasonable degree of thoroughness, and that its passage will benefit the cattle interests of this State. I shall watch its progress through Congress with interest,

Very truly, yours,

CLARK PERKINS.

Mr. BURKETT. I am not going to detain the Senate with reading any more letters. I think there may be some more letters which I should like to publish in my speech. They are all short. I ask unanimous consent that when I look over these papers if there are three or four or half a dozen others which I wish to print, I may have the privilege of handing them to the reporters and adding them to the ones I have had read. I have scores of letters from good men and very able newspaper edi-tors—men who have no interest in this more than I have and that only to help in some way to straighten out our unsatisfactory condition of affairs.

Mr. CARTER. It is understood that the letters are all friendly to the Senator's proposition?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator from Montana, as Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator from Montana, as I said before, I have twenty or thirty letters from those who do not like the bill, but if he is not entirely satisfied yet, I have a few here from his own State, which are very friendly to the proposition. I may say also to any other Senator from the western portion of the country that I have a few letters from all the States which are very friendly to this bill.

United States Senator, Nebraska.

My Dear Sir: I have received Senate file No. 7618, providing for the leasing of the public domain in the arid States and Territories, and after reading same carefully I think that it is a very good bill and covers the essential points necessary to make the law of value in case it passes both Houses. There should be some provisions made whereby the Government should derive a benefit from the vast range now owned by it and pastured or used yearly by others without any revenue whatever to the Government. I do not believe that the Government should be compelled to let this land lie idle when it might receive thousands of dollars for the lease of same. A bill of this kind would put the man who owns his land and grows stock on a better equality to compete with his competitor on the range, providing he has to pay a reasonable sum for his pasture lands, and thus tend to keep up the prices of stock for both. I shall do all I can to popularize it and hope you will be able to make it a law.

Very respectfully,

My Dear Sir: I just noticed in the State Journal land-leasing bill that you introduced, which I think is all right. I think it would be the best thing to solve the grazing problem, as the cattle interests in the sand hills are in bad shape. Much of the land that is not fit for anything but grazing can not be used without fence. Fences are being taken down and many stockmen forced out of business, especially the small stockmen that can not afford to run small bunches on an open range. By giving a man a lease or grazing permit he can fence it and make the best use of it by putting wells where needed, and twice the number of cattle could be produced and the land would be better taken care of and the homesteader not injured in the least, but would be beneficial to them, as there will be more work and a better market for their produce. I think your bill the nearest right to suit everyone concerned than any bill introduced yet. Wishing you the best success with your bill, I am,

Dear Sir: We are very much pleased to see that you have introduced a bill disposing of the grazing lands in western Nebraska. Our stock association, some months ago, drafted a bill along the lines recommended by the commission appointed by President Roosevelt. This bill was never presented from the fact that Congressman Kinkaid had already introduced a bill prepared by Mr. Cornell, of Valentine. We believe the bill introduced by you will meet the approval of practically all the western people.

Personally, myself, I have favored sale of these lands. I believe that the country can not be advanced and the lands protected only by private ownership. However, that seems to be an unpopular view at this particular time, and that a leasing bill would be much better for the people and the General Government until some future time at least.

We hope that you will push the bill and secure its passage. Any action that you think that our stock association should take up, and any matters with our western people, we will be glad to assist you in. Yours, very truly,

Hon. E. J. Burkett, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sexator: I am just home from an extended trip in the cattle country, and by request of a great many small cattle and ranch men I write you at this time. Everyone interested in the cattle business, especially the small ranchmen, are very much interested in your lease bill, and are very desirous that it shall pass. They claim that if the fences are all taken down, as it now seems they will be, they will be at the mercy of the large cattlemen. They can fence their hay ground and protect that, but they can not afford, where they only have a very small herd, to put a man with their stock. As a consequence their cattle would be scattered and the milk industry, from which source so many of them are at the present time making their living, would be ruined, as it would be impossible to get their cows home each night.

Then their grazing lands would be overrun by the herds of the large dealers. Outside of the homesteaders that have already taken advantage of the Kinkaid Act and picked up what few sections of land 2 here was some hay on, the balance of the land now open is strictly sand hills, and, as you are fully aware, no one could afford to attempt to live on this land, as it means simply starvation, while on the other hand, if a lease law is enacted, they can afford to lease the land at a low rental to run their cattle on. If a lease law is enacted, small men can then afford to go into that country and buy a quarter or half section of hay land and lease adjoining range land and make a good living, and these are the people that we are interested in and in whose interest I am writing this letter.

I have been over this territory so many times and am acquainted with so many of these people, and on this trip especially they have said to me, "Can not you write to our Senator and say to him that we are interested in this measure and hope that he will be able to get this law passed?" I would very much appreciate a copy of this bill. Thanking you fo

WESTFALL, MALHEUR COUNTY, OREG., February 4, 1907.

Senator Burkett, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I read in the daily Drovers' Journal Stockman a copy of your bill, Senate bill No. 7618, and must congratulate you on getting up this bill for the regulation of the public grazing lands of the arid West. This is the only system, if enacted into a law, that will do justice to all, small individual stockmen as well as large companies. The only system under which small owners of live stock and homesteaders will have a fair show to maintain themselves as against large companies. It is the only way by which our public grazing lands can be used to much better advantage and more profit to the users thereof, and at the same time protect them from entire annihilation, which is going on under the present system of grazing. Not only that, but with proper application of the system set forth in this bill it can be greatly improved, to the great benefit of coming generations. I am unalterably opposed to leasing the public ranges, as, in my opinion, based on fifty years' experience in handling live stock on the western ranges, any lease law, no matter how it be framed, would in a very short time put our whole public domain under the control of big corporations, who would soon find ways and means to exclude individual stock raisers and homesteaders. I have been engaged in the raising of live stock in this county for thirty-seven years. I commenced the business in 1857, when I herded cattle for Gen. Sidney Johnston at Fort Bridger, Wyo., and have followed it ever since with varying success, and I think I know what I am talking about.

Hoping that your bill, gotten up with much ability and a superior knowledge of conditions prevailing on our public ranges, will be promptly passed into a law,

I am, most respectfully, yours,

Charles Becker,

IRONSIDE, OREG., February 12, 1967.

Senator BURKETT.

DEAR SIR: I have been requested to write you in regard to Senate bill 7618. All whom I have interviewed on the subject most heartily indorse the bill, and hope it may become a law. I shall endeavor to send you some petitions soon.

I remain, yours, very respectfully,

C. Tr. LOCEY.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say just a few words in conclusion. I realize that a point of order can be raised against this legislation, and if so, it must go out. I have not made this speech with the vain hope that I might persuade everybody to desist from raising the point of order, nor with any hope that it might be decided otherwise than to strike it out, because I believe, and I acknowledge it on this occasion, although I did not on another amendment on another occasion—that it is subject to the point of order. But I have felt that I ought, in justice to myself, in view of the fact that it had been so criticised, to show to the Senate that it is not simply a wild and undigested proposition which the Committee on Agriculture has brought before the Senate. The Committee on Agriculture, in my judgment, were justified in bringing it before the Senate. It was not possible to get it before the Senate except as a part of the pending appropriation bill. That committee listened for three days to men who were better posted on this question than I am, more interested than I am, because I have not a foot of land in that section of the country. I have not a single hoof of any sort of live stock in the world except a Shetland pony, and I believe my children claim that. I am not interested, directly or indirectly, nor are any of my relations in any legis-lation of this kind. But I am interested, like the Senators from Colorado and Wyoming and Idaho and Montana and every other State, Iowa and all the Eastern States, in meeting these questions in a way that seems to us the best, and handling the Government's property in the best manner.

This may not be the best thing. It may not seem best to the Senator who has just interrupted me and whose judgment is better than mine on everything in this world-I will not except anything—because his is a riper judgment. He has lived more years. He has had more experience. He has met more people. His information is larger. But I felt that since I had introduced the bill I ought in justice to myself, aye, in justice to the great Committee on Agriculture which recommended this section as a portion of the bill, show to the Senate and to the country that there was a demand all over the country for some kind of legislation. And while it is not unanimous on the particular method of handling the lands, I do believe, and I doubt if any man will contradict me here, that the demand is more universal for this method of handling the grazing district than any other method which has been suggested.

Let me say that by next year, if it shall not pass this year, in my judgment the same Senators from those States who have here belaboring this proposition as they have, back here, urged on and impelled by the overwhelming influence of the constituency they represent and that they want to represent and will represent, and will get behind some kind of legislation which will adjust and determine the handling of this great grazing land section of the United States.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

During Mr. Burkett's speech,

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

I beg leave to submit a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 12, 15, 17, 39, 47, 54, 55, 62, 63, 87, 88, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 124,

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the report not to insist upon its adoption now. It is impossible for the Senate to understand it. There is really no opportunity for the Senator to explain it. Unless there is some urgency about it, I suggest that it be printed and go over.

Mr. CLAPP. I will say that when I offered the report I did not intend to interrupt the Senator from Nebraska by asking for its consideration, but simply that it might be printed in the RECORD; and I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Minnesota, I understood, suggested that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be printed and lie on the table.

ARMY AND NAVY UNION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BULKELEY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday amended the title of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 31) legalizing the change of name of the Regular Army and Navy Union of the United States to the Army and Navy Union of the United States of America.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BULKELEY. I move to amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the wearing of the distinctive badge adopted by the Army and Navy Union upon all occasions of ceremony."

This amendment of the title agrees with the joint resolution as passed.

The amendment of the title was agreed to.

INCORPORATION OF BANKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill S. 6906, just returned from the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 6906) to provide for the incorporation of banks within the District of Columbia, returned to the Senate in compliance with its request.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the votes preceding the passage of the bill and by which it was passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, are amendments in order? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Amendments to committee amendments only.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to introduce a general amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is not open to general amendments. Under the agreement committee amendments are to be first considered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to offer the amendment at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order to propose it, and it will lie on the table.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. I feel it my duty, in the interest of the dispatch of business, to ask that the pending amendment be temporarily laid aside and that we proceed with some other amendments which I think can be rapidly disposed of. I hope we shall very soon be able to take up the pending amendment again.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Vermont if it would not be just as well to interpose the point of order now and let the amendment go out, and let us proceed with the consideration of the bill?

Mr. PROCTOR. That is not for me to pass upon.
Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from New Jersey will permit me

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. In that behalf permit me to suggest that while the point of order could be interposed by anyone at any time, it would not abridge the discussion of the subject, because Senators desiring to express themselves with reference to the matter will take occasion to address the Senate on other amend-

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Montana that my only object was to try to abridge the discussion, and if that would not do it, I certainly would not insist upon the point of

Mr. CARTER. This discussion can not be abridged at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the amendment on page 41, line 12, adding $1,000,000 to the general appropriation for the Bureau of Forestry be taken up. I have myself no desire to discuss it at all. It has been discussed considerably. I think it is admitted by all that there should be some substantial addition, and the Secretary has gone over the matter carefully with me this morning, and says that will leave them less than they would have had if they had retained the right to use the receipts as was provided originally, the receipts now being required to be turned into the Treasury.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted. I will not detain the Senate more than a few minutes in giving my reasons have listened with the utmost interest to the debate, and while it has taken a wide range it nevertheless has been instructive in the elucidation of the question which has been raised by the effort to add this provision to the pending bill. Some three years ago I had occasion to study the forestry policy upon a question then pending in relation to the Appalachian Mountains. Since then to the Appalachian proposition has been added an amendment covering the White Mountains. Here we have the direct reverse of the question which has received so much attention and excited so much opposition from the western Senators. Here is the East, the older States, asking that the Government policy of forest reserves may be applied within their borders, the forests they have left, preserved, and the regions laid waste by ruthless destruction reforested.

The discussion has tended to prove, if it has proved anything, from the standpoint of Senators who have talked so ably and so eloquently, that the whole forest-reserve system as now administered is a great mistake. But, Mr. President, this forest-reserve system is now only about fifteen years old. If I remember rightly, it was begun in its present form only about ten years ago, and it has already accomplished extraordinary results.

One would think, to hear the speeches of Senators, that forestry was an innovation in our country and that it has never been practiced anywhere else. There is no system for the benefit of a country and its people which has been better thought out and more practically demonstrated than this in the older countries of the world. It began in Switzerland a thousand years ago. Five hundred years ago Switzerland had a scientific method of forest reserves. Except for what that Government did so intelligently, Switzerland would be to-day practically depopulated. As you go in the railways through the valleys of Switzerland, the most attractive thing is the scene presented by the Swiss cottages up as high as the eye can see on farms which are upon the almost perpendicular slopes of mountains. They are held there and populations are supported by reason of a systematic and scientific system of forest reserves. Under it you will see at once that all that mountain country is so dotted with forests, large and small, that they catch the snow and hold the rainfall and prevent the mountains from being de-nuded of their soil and the farms in the valleys from being carried off into the rivers.

It is the same in Germany. As you go through Germany and look out of the car windows or make excursions by automobile through the territory you find the beneficent results of a scientific system of forestry which has been in existence for hundreds of years.

The attack has been specially made here upon the college man and the man educated for this particular purpose who is exploiting our reserves, and it is said the conditions in the West can only be known by the settler and the hard-headed man upon the soil, who has never given a moment's attention to the study

Sir, in Germany they have had for numberless years schools of forestry the same as they have their famous universities for the education of their professional and scientific men, and no man there can enter upon the forest occupation under the Government until he has won his diploma and is certified by the schools of forestry for his occupation.

We have in this country about one-fifth of the forest lands owned by the Government. In Germany 26 per cent of the forest lands are owned by the Government, and not only that, but every individual owner is compelled by rigid government laws and government inspection, under the direction of this criticised body of foresters, to look after his own trees upon his own land.

But we have another lesson from those countries, sir, and that is the reforestation of the land. Italy found that she was losing her soil and productiveness and injuring her people because of conditions which had arisen from the deforest-ing of the land in the centuries which had gone by, and poor as Italy is to-day—and her taxes are, I think, greater than those of any other country in the world—she is spending $12,000,000 now to reforest the lands and to bring back those trees and groves which inspired the genius of Horace and of Virgil and the poets whom we studied in our youth in the colleges

In France they established a scientific system of forestry in the time of Louis XIV. But the destruction of the forests had gone to such an extent that shortly afterwards it was discovered that they must not only preserve the forests that were in existence, but that they must reforest, as far as possible, vast sections of land. Within the last twenty-five years there has been spent in France in reforestation $18,000,000, and $24,-000,000 has been appropriated for the continuation of the process of foresting under scientific rules all over the country.

This reforesting is costing in Italy $20 an acre; it is costing in France $34 an acre, and we are securing now, where the forest still exists, forest reserves without costing anything in taxation upon the people except their preservation by a proper system.

The system of making money out of these forests has been assailed. The forests of Germany yield an income to the Government of from $1 to $5 an acre, and the older and more scientific methods in Switzerland yield an income to the Government of $8 an acre. We have here the report of the Chief Forester that within two years our own forests will be selfsustaining. Why should not the Government derive an income from this system when the purpose of the income is to preserve the sources of the water supply and to preserve for the people of this country what is equally as important, the wood, with all that that means?

Now, take the conditions in the Appalachian regions, which I have had occasion to study. There is the only territory with hard wood upon it which exists in this country in any consid-Hard wood is becoming so scarce and at the same erable area. time so valuable they are running light railways up into those mountains, and with the indiscriminate manner in which the lumberman cuts his wood they devastate the whole country. The big trees and the little trees all come down, and then when they are cut off the farmer has his opportunity.

We have here in perfection exactly the system which my eloquent friend from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn] was so admirably advocating a few minutes ago—that the present generation and the present time shall enjoy the benefits of the soil and of the After the lumberman has swept off the forests from the Appalachian Mountains, then comes the farmer. There is under those trees a humus several feet in thickness, the accumulation of centuries, which acts as a sponge. There is a greater rainfall in the Appalachian Mountains than there is in any other part of the country, and that rainfall is held in that sponge and percolates out into the streams and into the rivers for the preservation of agriculture in the valleys of seven rivers and of six States.

What have been the results from practical experience of deforesting that region as far as it has gone? These results I state from study and observation. For the first three years the farmer from this rich soil gathers an abundant harvest, a harvest which enables him probably to pay for his farm. with the floods carrying off his farm into the valleys he has three years more in which the grass will grow, and nothing else, where he can graze his stock. Then the rocks are bare, and he has to move on after the lumberman for new farms, until they also have disappeared in the valleys.

But there is another result which has come from the defor-esting first and then the denuding of the mountain sides. The waters not being held pour down in floods into the valleys and tear great gullies through the valley farms and run them off into the rivers and out toward the ocean.

Four years ago one flood in the Catawba Valley cost that valley a million and three-quarters of dollars, and within the whole area three years ago of those six States there were $18,000,000 in value of farm lands wiped out of existence by the floods, which came from this inexpert, unwise, and unscientific method of deforesting.

Mr. President, not only are the people of certain States, as has been claimed here, interested in this matter, but the people of all the States, the whole people of the United States are interested. They are interested in keeping the wood so that we shall have a wood supply forever. They are interested in keeping the farms so that the product shall feed our Eastern and Middle States, where we can raise only about one-tenth enough from the farms to feed our population.

In regard to the administration of the forest reserve and the attack which has been made in a good-natured way upon the Forester, and in a way the opposite of good nature upon the Secretary of the Interior, that seems to me to require only a word. If forestry is scientific, it needs a scientific man and an educated man to be at the head of it. If the forestry department is a scientific department, it requires trained men to manage it. It certainly is to the credit of the Chief Forester that out of this chaos he should have brought a system under which he has persuaded succeeding Presidents of the United States, and the different Secretaries of Agriculture while he has been in office, to recommend to Congress, and has persuaded Congress to make the legislation by which we have the forest reserves, by which we have their administration, and by which we have the continuance of the system.

Senators speak about him as if he were an autocrat, acting alone upon his individual judgment. But it must be remembered that the recommendations which come here in regard to forestry come from the Secretary of Agriculture, and in regard to other lands in the forestry division from the Secretary of the Interior, and all of them from the President of the United States, so that before the matter of administration is acted upon it always has the approval of not only the Chief Forester, but also of the men who stand at the head of these great Departments in the Cabinet of the President, and of the President of the United States.

I know the feeling there is against the Secretary of the Interior, and I think that feeling in its geographical division marks the sentiment in the East and in the West in regard to this forestry question. In the East the Secretary of the Interior is regarded as one of the most courageous and high-minded public officials the country has ever had, and west of the Missouri River apparently the sentiment, at least in some of the States, is voiced by the remark of the witty Congressman who said that if the Secretary of the Interior retired, as was expected, on the 4th of March, there would not be a dry throat from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, it seems to me that we are acting most unwisely in cutting down, as we shall do, unless this amendment is adopted, the appropriations for the continuance of this work. The experiment has gone on for ten years. The experiment has produced wonderful results, which have received the approbation of every man who has studied and become familiar with this question. It has produced results which have placed us in the line of the older countries with their experience in the conservation and preservation for all posterity of this magnificent heritage.

The Forester says that in two years these vast domains will become self-supporting and in five years they will give a large revenue to the Government. He is justified in saying that by the results which have come during the ten years of administration and segregation, and he is justified in saying it from the results of hundreds of years in the older countries where from necessity this system has been practiced and these wise measures have been adopted.

So I say it is both good legislation and wise administration to permit the President, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Chief Forester to continue and complete this plan, and then see whether the results which they promise and prophesy come about. If they do, then these criticisms are a mistake. If they do not, we have lost nothing in the two years; we have lost nothing in the five years; instead we have preserved for all the people of the United States, instead of giving them up to great combinations of lumbermen, this magnificent heritage of the forests of our country.

In our own State of New York we have felt the unwisdom of our forefathers in grasping for their generation and for immediate profit the woods. As soon as we began to enlarge our canal we found that the water had to be supplied which would give the depth necessary for the navigation which was desired, and then a diligent study showed that we must preserve, as far as possible now, the sources of the water supply. The State entered into a plan of forestry in the Adirondack region based upon that of the General Government, in which they have already spent millions of dollars and will spend millions more. The experience of New York will be the experience of every one of these States if, now while we have the opportunity, the Government is permitted to carry on this system wisely and efficiently.

Mr. BEVERIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish merely to state that I believe the amendment before the Senate is the one on page 41, line 12, after the word "expenses," to insert the words "one million." As I said, I have nothing to say upon that amendment. It has been already pretty fully discussed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 41.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the question immediately before the Senate is whether or not the appropriation for the Forest Service, which the other day, perhaps without full information, was reduced, is to be restored. After the very long attack upon the Government's policy, I may be permitted some time to explain and defend it. No debate which has occurred this session has been so useful as this in informing both the Senate and the country on a policy of such high importance.

There are those of us who were deeply interested in this question and yet who were not informed about what this Service meant and about the priceless work for the whole country which it was doing. There have been in the course of this debate some points made, charges made, and various statements made which require some attention; and it is to do this that I rise to address the Senate before we take any vote, if a vote, indeed, shall be necessary upon this amendment.

SIGNIFICANCE OF RESERVE POLICY.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark] the other day began his remarks by asking the question, "What does this great forest-reserve system," which he said included some 200,000 square miles, "mean?" Since then, Mr. President, the question has been pretty fully answered. It means, perhaps, a wiser piece of public policy, so far as the present and future prosperity of this people is concerned, than any one single other piece of public policy affecting our lands. It means, Mr. President, at the bottom the conservation and the distribution of the waters, upon which agriculture depends, and upon which the population of the Senator's State and of other States similarly situated depend for its growth more than upon any one other single element that can be named.

RESERVES THE MAINSTAY OF IRRIGATION.

Mr. President, we are spending now, or arranging to spend, some $50,000,000 for the irrigation of what was once thought was the "arid West." I remember very well the great fight which was made for the irrigation law. It was finally put through the Senate and the House against the counsel of some of the most conservative members of each body, but I think its wisdom now is universally recognized by men of all parties and men of all sections.

But, Mr. President, you can not irrigate with a word—you have to irrigate with water. You can not irrigate merely by digging a hole in the desert; not enough water is supplied. In the last analysis it must come from rainfall in the mountains. The Senator knows better, no doubt, than I do that unless the forests on those mountains are conserved irrigation is impossible. Because if the forests are felled the rain which falls in equal abundance sweeps down in torrential floods and either takes away the reservoirs or fills them up with silt. So the basis of the whole irrigation system, which means so much to the western country, and therefore to the whole country, rests upon the foundation of the forest-reserve system.

Mr. F. H. Newell, Chief of the Reclamation Service, has repeatedly emphasized the very great importance of forest reserves in connection with the Government's irrigation work. In the second annual report of the Reclamation Service (1902–3) Mr. Newell stated: "One of the most important matters in connection with the permanent development of the water resources of the country is the protection of the catchment basins from destructive influences. It is essential to preserve in such locations a certain amount of forest cover, and to prevent the destruction of these by fire or by overgrazing. The headwaters of many of the important streams are already included within forest reserves, and some of the important reservoir sites are thus guarded from injury. In other localities the forest reserve boundaries should be extended to include the country from which comes the greatest part of the run-off. This land usually has no value for cultivation, is rugged, and suitable only for the production of trees. Grazing to a limited extent is practicable and will not interfere with the best use of the waters, but if unrestricted the number of cattle and sheep may be increased to such an extent that the grass is destroyed and the bare soil is washed by storms.'

Again, at the hearing before the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives (January 11 to 30, 1901),

Mr. Newell explained himself as follows:

"As Mr. Walcott has outlined, the great undertaking of national importance is first to hold the timber-clad mountains of arid country from which the water comes in forest reserves, not keeping the timber from use, but letting it be cut under such restrictions as will enable the matured timber to be taken and keep the forest itself as a perpetual crop. This has already been entered upon by the National Government."

In the course of an address before the Society of American Foresters (March 19, 1903) Mr. Newell said:

"The future of these reclamation projects is dependent largely upon the keeping of the forest areas in good condition. All of these rivers whose waters are to be utilized issue from forests. We are vitally interested in the preservation and proper control of the forest reserves. Much has been written of the theoretical influence of forests upon the rivers, and it is evident that in the planning of these reclamation works it is to their advantage that the forest reserves be extended to take in as far as possible the catchment areas of the streams. This work of the Government is not a tentative experiment, and every condition must be kept as favorable as possible for the future maintenance of these great works."

ALL RESERVES CONSERVE TIMBER OR WATER.

Forest reserves are created for these main objects: To conserve and regulate stream flow, and to maintain a permanent supply of timber. Some forest reserves are valuable for both these purposes; others are valuable mainly for their effect upon stream flow. In southern California, for example, forest reserves have been created in the San Gabriel Mountains, not with the chief purpose of the production of timber, because these mountains are largely covered with brush known as chaparral and have few trees growing upon them. But these southern California reserves serve a most valuable purpose in maintaining the flow of streams rising in them, which supply important cities, such as Los Angeles, and are essential for the development of water power, and, above all, in the conservation of streams used in the irrigation of arid lands. Again, areas in these reserves are capable of growing trees, although no trees are growing upon them at present. As rapidly as its funds permit, and conditions warrant, the Forest Service is planting up these areas.

To make the boundaries of forest reserves conform exactly to the boundaries of existing forests would be to leave out of these reserves large areas which are of immense value as a protection to the water flow, and which have grown trees and will grow trees again under proper methods. Obviously the boundaries of forest reserves must be drawn not to conform to the boundaries of existing forests, but based on the actual character of the country in its relation to the objects for which reserves are created. Brush and grass covered areas of natural forest land in the mountains, even if they do not now produce trees, ought to be given exactly the same protection as existing forests receive, because they often exercise a not less important effect in conserving and regulating stream flow.

The Forest Service has never recommended the creation of a single reserve the land inclosed in which can not serve its main purpose either by the regulation of stream flow or by the production of timber. No considerable bodies of open range are included in forest reserves. So far as open range is included, it has been included not as range land, but because it is necessary to the protection of stream flow or because it is suitable for forest planting.

RESERVES BASED ON THOROUGH EXAMINATION OF LANDS,

Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark] said further-and it was a most important charge, one that we should carefully consider, one that the country should know the truth about—that the reserves had been created without knowledge of actual conditions upon the ground. So far from that being accurate (and I am satisfied that neither the Senator nor any other Senator who spoke meant to make an inaccurate statement) perhaps as much as in the case of any other scientific department of the Government the most careful, detailed, painstaking, and scientifically accurate examinations were made.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator allow an interruption?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the Senator if he refers to my statement—the only time I remember to have referred to it—when I spoke of the effort to create the forest reserves under the appropriation made by Congress of $25,000 when a special committee went out to make an examination?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will state to the Senator that I do not know whether that was what he referred to at the time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I made that statement, and my information was from the chairman of the special committee appointed, after he returned to Washington and the reservaons were made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know whether the Senator was referring to that or not. That was some time ago-in 1896, to be exact. That was before the Government division of forestry had anything to do with examining land for forest reserves.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the only one I remember. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not so particularly referring to the Senator's being accurate as I am to the general impression which was produced by that and similar statements, I frankly say to the Senator, produced upon my own mind and which has not yet been by authority denied-not denied to any extent-because we are not concerned with denying; we are trying to get the truth.

These reserves, I say, are created after the most painstaking, comprehensive, and scientific examination of conditions on the ground. If it were earlier in the day, I should stop here first to read to the Senate the details of the plan upon which information is gathered for determining whether or not a forest reserve shall be made. None of us could have more valuable information upon that subject, which is quite as important as any other subject we now have before us, than the method by which this vast reserved forest system, which is the heart and source of all the water for the great irrigation system, is made.

I hold in my hand, and I shall ask to have entirely inserted in the Record in my remarks, the instructions to the field men who make the examinations. I want to read two or three of these instructions—I will not read them all, they are too voluminous—but from the two or three I do read the Senate can see the minute care taken in ascertaining knowledge upon which to make the reserves.

Eight or ten pages are almost entirely devoted to giving painstaking directions to the men who are to make the physical examination of the ground in order to collect the information for the making of these reserves. I shall ask that a portion of this which I have not read be inserted in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Furthermore, I have here, and will exhibit that the Senate may see it, a map of the Shoshone or Coeur d'Alene Reserve in Idaho. The Senate will notice the various colors. This deep green here [indicating] in the south-west portion is the heavily forested portion of this reservation. These brown patches [indicating] throughout that reservation are the burnt-over districts, where millions of dollars, the property of the United States, has been destroyed by forest fires. The lighter portions here [indicating] are the young timber. There are other portions that represent sagebrush.

With reference to this green portion here [indicating], within these lines, heavily wooded, it is nearly all taken up by the State or by settlers. That is the "ruthless" and "infamous" way in which the Government of the United States has destroyed the resources of the State, as Senators have charged.

Here [exhibiting] is another map of the same region which I exhibit in order that the Senate may see the accurate and scientific care taken in ascertaining the facts by the men on the ground. This map shows the lands which are patented. They are these [indicating]. They are the lands which are patented, where people have gone in. These [indicating] are the approved railroad lieu selections—and I am going to have some thing to say upon that subject, I will say to the Senator from Montana, pretty soon. The unapproved selections are these [indicating]. The approved State selections are in blue, which Senators can see here [indicating]. The school lands are here [indicating]. So I might go on. I am exhibiting this map to the Senate in connection with the other one, to show Senators the extreme care with which not only the work is mapped out, but with which the work is executed.

TIMBER FREE TO SMALL USERS FOR HOME BUILDING AND OTHER NEEDS. Mr. President, having located a reserve, what occurs? In the first place, it is again carefully mapped, classified, and examined. The Department knows just exactly what kind of timber is in every part of the reserve. What is done with that timber? Two things are done with it. It is given away by the Government to the small users without charge—to the settler, to the homesteader, to those men that we have been led to believe were so badly treated by this "tyrannical" Government—and who with this timber build their homes. Lumber and timber are given free of charge. Not only is the place to build their homes given them, but all the timber they need.

In order to show how fairly and with what careful detail the law providing for the free use of timber and stone is applied, I will quote the regulation in this respect:

"Regulation 10. The free-use privilege may be granted to set-tlers, farmers, prospectors, or similar persons who may not reasonably be required to purchase, and who have not on their own lands or claims, or on lands controlled by them, a sufficient or practicably accessible supply of timber or stone for the purposes named in the law. It may also be granted to school and road districts, churches, or cooperative organizations of settlers desiring to construct roads, ditches, reservoirs, or similar improvements, for mutual or public benefit. Free use of material to be used in any business will be refused, as, for example, to saw-mill proprietors, owners of large establishments or commercial enterprises, and companies or corporations. The free-use privilege will not be given to any trespasser."

To what extent this free-use privilege was actually availed of last year, the following statement shows:

TIMBER SOLD SO THAT FOREST IS CONSERVED.

Next certain timber is sold, and to whom? To those who wish it, whether in small or in large quantities; not for their own use, but for commercial purposes. Ought the Government give it to them? Heretofore men have made millions sawing into lumber the timber that belonged to the people of this Nation. Shall we return to that policy?

Now, then, what timber is sold?

I will come in a moment to the question of policy that was

I will come in a moment to the question of pointy that was raised as to "the Government being a merchant."

Not only is what is known as "down" timber, to which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] referred yesterday, sold, but what is called "ripe" timber is sold.

Mr. SPOONER. I said that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not hear the Senator when he said it. Perhaps I had been called out of the Chamber. Then the Senator did cover that. The truth about it is that these forest reserves are merely great natural wood factories, and unless reserves are so treated, and trees cut that should be cut and when they should be cut the result is bad to the forest itself. It is blown down, it rots, and is itself a source of decay. What shall the Government do? Let it fall and let it rot? It is the Government's property, just as much as the chairs in this Chamber; just as much as the money we seem to be so afraid to appropriate is Government property.

The prime object of the forest reserves is use. While the forest and its dependent interests must be made permanent and safe in preventing overcutting or injuring the every reasonable effort is made to satisfy legitimate demands. Timber cut from forest reserves may be handled and shipped like any other timber, except that it is not sold for shipment in regions where local construction requires the entire supply, or is certain to do so in the future. Anyone may purchase timber except trespassers. Forest rangers are authorized to sell timber in amounts not exceeding $20 in value; forest supervisors not more than $100 worth, and the Forester larger sales.

We talk about "economy." Economy of what? Of the Government's resources, and those resources consist in eash, in land, in trees, in ships, in anything else that the Government So, if we are conserving these trees, and derive revenue from them, we are practicing the highest economy just as much as if we are careful—and we should be careful—of the actual dollars appropriated.

In all, over 300,000,000 board feet of this timber was sold during the last fiscal year. Of the benefits which flow to the community from the administration of the National forests the Secretary of Agriculture, in his last annual report, truly said:

These National forests are being made useful now. The benefits which they are to secure are not deferred benefits. Through Government control the interests of the future are safeguarded, but not by sacrificing those of the present. Far from handicapping the development of the States in which they lie, the reserves will powerfully promote development. They work counter to the prosecution of no industry, and retard the beneficial use of no resource.

And again:

And again:
Finally, Forest Service administration of the reserves is beneficial alike to the lumber industry and to the timber-consuming public. There is now standing on the reserves not less than 300,000,000,000,000 board feet of merchantable timber. This is not locked up from present use as a hoarded supply against future needs; it is ready for the immediate demands of a developing country. It will not be rushed upon the wholesale market in competition with the cheap stumpage prices of private owners anxious for ready money, and it will not be disposed of under a shortsighted policy of utilization which would leave a gap between the end of the present supply and the oncoming of the second crop; but it is and will continue to be available, first for the small user—homebuilder, rancher, or miner—and then for the needs of lumber concerns, large miners, and railroads for which a timber supply is indispensable, and which, in turn, are indispensable to the prosperity of the West.

So that, Mr. President, is what is done with that wood, and

So that, Mr. President, is what is done with that wood, and that is not only bringing a revenue into the Treasury, but it is creating a continuous revenue from the same source for the future. I ask any Senator who objects to the Government being a "merchant," as we have heard, whether or not any Administration could be justified in not saving to the people of the United States the revenue that comes from the sale of this tim-What else would you do with it?

Would you give to one man to receive freely and sell for his own profit the timber for which another man stands ready to pay two or three or five dollars a thousand feet-millions upon millions of feet of it? For there is no other choice than this either some favored individual or the people of the United States must receive the benefit. Under sales already made the Government will receive hundreds of thousands of dollars. The timber sold can not be removed except in large quantities; expensive plants must be provided to make it possible to utilize the timber at all. Should the Government abstain from receiving this revenue that some private individual may gratuitously reap a fortune? If so, on what principle shall selection of the person to receive this princely favor be made?

TECHNICAL INVESTIGATIONS ADD TO COUNTRY'S WEALTH.

But that is not all, Mr. President, nor is it perhaps the most important thing. We are developing this country, developing its resources. I very greatly doubt whether we have had any source of tangible wealth to the people so great as the aid that has been given the people in information, scientific direction, and help by the Department of Agriculture. An entire day might be most usefully spent, both so far as the people and the Senate are concerned, in reviewing the actual practical help to the people by the information that is gathered and given to the farmers of the country by the Department of Agriculture.

So the next thing the Forest Service does is to constantly test the trees and the various kinds of wood for new uses. that some woods which formerly were supposed to be worthless are most valuable; so that, as one kind of timber is cut off and the lumber disappears another kind of timber is found.

I cite as examples of that two trees with which some Senators here will be especially familiar. One is the western hem-lock and the other is the southern gum. The southern gum was a tree which afforded excellent lumber, but which immediately warped, so that the stock expression of a lumberman was that if you were to go to sleep on one side of a southern gum board you would wake up next morning on the other side of it, because it would warp so. But the Department has found a method of cutting and treating it so that it has become one of the considerable resources of the States where it grows. It has taken the place of wood which heretofore was used al most exclusively, but which now has become practically exhausted, just because we did not have such forest preservation as is now proposed.

Another is the western hemlock. Up to a few years ago the western hemlock was supposed to be unfit for lumber. Department has developed the fact that it makes an admirable lumber; and now it constitutes a source of real revenue to the States where it grows.

The Forest Service is active in finding new uses for sawmill waste; testing new woods to be used for paper in place of those which are becoming exhausted or too expensive; testing new woods for mine props, railroad ties, box boards, vehicle woods, wooden pavements, cooperage, and many other uses. It is studying methods of preserving woods against decay, and is thus increasing enormously the service that can be got out of wood in some of its commonest uses. In this one field its work is equivalent to increasing the timber resources of the country by creating out of nothing thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of standing forest. Both by promoting economy in the use of wood and by preventing waste in harvesting the forest crop it has added millions of dollars' worth of material to the national wealth in private ownership.

Mr. President, that is not only creating wealth for the Government as such, but it is creating wealth for the people, because, of course, most everybody knows that most of the forest land of the United States is held by private owners. I think perhaps less than one-fifth—the Senator from Wyoming may know about that, and I want to be corrected if the statement is wrong, and it is too high, if anything-is held in Government

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is very much too low.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You mean that much more than the amount I named is held by private owners?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that very much more than I have stated is held by private individuals, but the private owners do not and can not, unless they operate upon a scale almost as great as the Government itself, make these scientific examinations which discover the unknown properties of their wood. in this one way the Department is creating enormous wealth for the American people.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Right on that point, will the Senator allow me a question as to the scientific work of the Bureau?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Is it not a fact that nearly all of the scientific experiments of the kind to which the Senator is referring are conducted by the private owners, and that nearly all these experiments are made upon private timber lands? ask him if that is not the general fact.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; not all of them by any manner of

I understand the fact to be

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I did not say all of them; I said pretty generally the experiment was not a united experiment between the private owner of the timber and the Government. COOPERATION WITH PRIVATE OWNERS AND INDUSTRIES

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the fact to be—and I desire to get it right and I will put it in the Record right if I do not get it correct now, because we are trying to get information and we have no pride of opinion, and if any of us find that we have made a mistake we are all equally willing to admit it-I understand the fact to be about these experiments that they are conducted to ascertain the best uses of timber on the Government's forest lands, and also the best uses of timber on the lands of private owners. Where any private owner of forest land desires to test his wood, the Government cooperates very cheerfully, and even invites such cooperation. I am sure that every Senator here, no matter what may be his opinion upon any other subject, would approve that plan as a wise and common-sense thing.

In addition to cooperative work in timber tests, the Forest Service gives advice and assistance to private owners of timber lands all over the country. Unless these forests also are preserved, a timber famine not less dangerous than a coal famine is in sight. Applications for help of this kind come from both owners of small wood lots and holders of large timber tracts. What are called "working plans" are made; that is, certain rules are recommended for the proper protection, management, and utilization of the timber, to the end that the owner may be assured of a continuous supply of wood, at the same time cutting what is necessary for present needs.

The object of the wood-lot work is to give, free of cost to farmers and other small owners, advice and assistance in the improvement and use of their woodlands. The cooperative work on large timber tracts embraces the whole country, and in many cases the plans recommended by the Forest Service are now actually being carried out very successfully.

Cooperative work is also undertaken with the various States, and this branch of the work has been taken up with the greatest detail in California.

EXPLOITATION VERSUS DEVELOPMENT.

So, Mr. President, we see what the Department is doing. I am trying to forward the work as much as possible. Of course there is a tremendous and far-reaching and deeply founded policy beneath it which I stated in the beginning, and that is the prevention of that portion of this country—and, if we could, of every portion of this country—from continuing a desert or being made into one if it is not one already. We are in a great work—and how characteristically American it is—the work of reclaiming, of saving, of developing, of making two blades of grass grow where none grew before. We have passed the period of destruction. We have abandoned that ruinous exploitation which was called "development," but was the reverse. We are replacing as fast as we can those gigantic resources which, in the strength and in consequence of our national youth, we so ruthlessly and thoughtlessly destroyed. It is a great constructive policy designed to create conditions that will supply homes for hundreds of thousands and millions in the near future and even a denser population in the more distant future.

I have described some of them. One part of it is the conservation of the water. That is a subject which ought to be spoken of perhaps for ten or fifteen minutes by itself, but I am not going to take two minutes with it. I think we all now pretty well understand the methods by which these waters are conserved. The rain falls on the mountains, and the leaves—not the trees—and the leaves and the leaf soil hold it like a sponge. The great reservoir of nature is the forested mountain, from which water is distributed over the surrounding country. This provision and plan of nature with reference to the conservation and the distribution of waters is as wise as it is beautiful.

It is to restore that condition that the Forest Service is laboring, not only with fidelity, but with intelligence that is not surpassed by any other Department of the Government, to put the statement very mildly indeed.

GAME PROTECTION IN ACCORDANCE WITH STATE LAWS.

Now I come to a point that I see I have jotted down concerning the creation of game preserves. I have looked into that matter, and I find that no game preserves have been created except by Congress itself, and, of course, if we ever have acted unwisely in allowing the animals which nature placed there to be preserved there, the way is open to us, without any objection from the Department, or the right of any objection from the Department, to repeal our own acts. But this is what the Department has done. I find upon examination with reference to the laws of the States concerning game that where a forest reservation exists within the limits of a State the forest reservation is patrolled, guarded, and cared for by the foresters and forest rangers of the Nation. And the Nation's Forest Service, taking care of the Government forest reserves, cooperates with the States in the execution of the States' game laws even in those reserves. Mr. President, that ought to be satisfactory—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To the most extreme State rights man. I regretted when the question of State rights was interjected here. It has nothing to do with this question. No friend of forest reserves would destroy the rights of a State, his own or any other, and I am sure, on the contrary, no rational believer in that doctrine would deny that it was not only the right, but the duty of the Nation to preserve its great forests for the large public purposes I have described, as much as it possibly could.

public purposes I have described, as much as it possibly could.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark] said that that was what he wanted them to do. He was glad of that. My own sincere belief is that when we examine one by one the points that have been made, and gather information upon them from the original source, every one of the Senators who have spoken against, not the forest-reserve system itself, but its administration, will be entirely satisfied—yes, and even pleased, as much pleased as those of us who, on account of the exigencies of the debate were compelled to examine into those facts.

debate, were compelled to examine into those facts.

The regulation of the Forest Service in reference to the protection of game and stock is as follows:

Regulation 70: All forest officers will cooperate with State or Territorial officials, so far as they can without undue interference with their regular reserve work, to enforce local laws for the protection of game and stock. When authorized to do so by the proper State officers they will, without additional pay, act as game wardens and stock inspectors, with full power to enforce the local laws. If not so authorized they will promptly inform the State officials of all violations discovered.

discovered.

All supervisors will communicate at once with the State or Territorial game warden and request appointment for themselves and all the rangers under their supervision as deputy State game wardens. This appointment is sufficient warrant to arrest for offenses against the State and Territorial game laws.

RESERVES NATURAL FOREST LAND.

I come now to a statement made—and it was an illustrative statement—yesterday afternoon by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson]—and I am sorry that he is not in his seat. But the Senate has heard him—and I think possibly one or two other statements were made like it. The Senator from Colorado yesterday described, with that vigorous eloquence which so characterizes him and charms us all, the establishment in Colorado of a great reserve, larger, he said, than some States, without a single tree upon it or any tree ever having grown upon it. I took pains to look up the facts as to that statement; and what are the facts?

It is true, in part, Mr. President, that such a reserve has been taken up so far as the existing trees are concerned. But it was originally land every foot of which was covered with magnificent woods, which have long since been burned away until parts of the mountains—and it is a mountain region—where that reserve is are as bare of trees as three mountains I saw in the States of Colorado and California—though they were bare from a different cause—as the surface of this desk. But it is natural forest land. It is ideal for reforesting; it is being reforested. But the reforesting is impossible if all the herds and all the flocks of Colorado belonging to her great cattle and sheep kings and princes—and I have no objection to them; I should like to be a king of that kind myself,—are allowed to pasture their countless herds over that reserve at will and without control as well as without charge.

Mr. President, it was held out by intimation, if not by direct statement, that this land was fit for agricultural purposes and that the policy of the Department, therefore, had been to despotically take a principality in size, where no trees grew, and keep off the "sweeping tide of immigrants" from "founding homes." The fact is that it is above the agricultural line where homes are not "founded," and "immigrants" do not "pour in tides" or "pour" in any other way. Most of it is over 8,000 feet above the sea level, where farms are not practicable, except, I believe, a certain kind of farming, which is not worth taking into account. It is one of nature's natural forest reservoirs of water for the purpose of distributing that water for the uses of the people where the land farther down is agricultural.

What exists with reference to that land now is this: It is grown over with grasses; those grasses are good for grazing, and over that great extent, which belongs to the Government of the United States, the stockmen and the sheep men of Colorado have been fattening their herds. And they ask to do it still more—and that, too, without paying the Government a dollar.

RESERVES NOT UNPEOPLED SOLITUDES.

Let us bear in mind the actual conditions. A forest reserve contains lands "chiefly valuable for timber." Yet if the farmer finds up and down some valley that creeps back into these mountains a site for settlement, it is open to him as much as any other part of the public domain, if he enters in good faith. The reserves have been pictured as vast stretches of unbroken wilderness, empty solitudes trod only by the forester. In point of fact, they contain thousands of ranches; they contain hamlets, villages, and towns, to say nothing of lumber camps and railroad construction camps and mining camps. Wherever signs of mineral can be found the prospector stakes out his claim. In summer they are alive with those who resort thither for health and recreation—50,000 of them in one season in southern California alone—and with the cowboys and sheep herders, who guard and care for the 7,000,000 head of animals that last year grazed in the forest reserves.

BENEFITS OF REGULATED GRAZING.

These forests of the West are unlike those of the East. They are often open and park like, with forage plants growing beneath the trees. These grasses, like the trees themselves, will be wasted if they are not used. For this reason the Forest Service permits grazing in the reserves, but in every case is careful to exclude grazing from areas in which it has been found harmful. For example, grazing is not permitted in forests "under reproduction," as the Forester speaks of it—that is, forests in which cuttings are in progress to invite young growth. Forest reserves have never been created out of lands which are merely grazing lands. Yet this resource is like the forest in that it may be greatly impaired and even destroyed by unwise use. Unrestricted admittance of all stock would bring, and in many cases has brought, a decline in the number which the range would support. By licensing only so many head as the range can well support the Forest Service has proved to the satisfaction of the stockmen themselves that the carrying power of the range season after season is actually increased.

range season after season is actually increased.

It was said that this was the crowning "infamy" of the Department, that the Department actually charged a "license fee" before any of these men were permitted to graze their cattle. I ask the Senate what else could the Government do? Ought the Government give that privilege to the cattle and the sheep men, and if the Government ought not to give it to them can anybody imagine a safer or more practicable system of charging than the permit system? The legality of the regulations under which the permit is required, resting upon the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. L., 34-36), has never been questioned by any court. It was established by the decision of the United States circuit court of appeals at San Francisco in 1903, in the case of Dastervignes against the United States (122 Fed. Rep., 30), in which that court affirmed a decree granting an injunction to prevent unper-The district courts of Utah, southern California, mitted grazing. and the Eastern District of Washington have, it is true, decided that unpermitted grazing is not punishable as a crime—that the act of June 4, 1897, in so far as it provides for criminal punishment is unconstitutional. But Judge De Haven, of the Northern District of California, in the cases of United States against Daguerre and the United States against Urarti, held that the criminal provisions of the statute are constitutional, though in so doing he overruled a decision to the contrary made by him before the Dastervignes case was decided by the circuit court of appeals. The supreme court of Arizona, a court coordinate with the district courts, also held, in the criminal case of Dent against United States (76 Pac. Rep., 455), relying on the authority of the Dastervignes case, and overruling its earlier decision, that the statute is constitutional in making violation of the regulations a criminal offense.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR LIEU LAND ABUSES.

Now I come to the question of lieu land. I thought when I heard the Senator from Oregon make his charge the other day that he made a very serious charge, and when it was re-newed by the Senator from Montana it appeared to me even grave. I knew that neither one of those Senators would make such a charge as that thoughtlessly. I have looked it up, and, in my opinion, that charge is entirely true.

I think it is entirely well founded, and after my investigation I think the language of the Senator from Montana, which I thought at the time was severe, is entirely justified, when he said that the relations of the Department at one time with the land-grant railroads would bear looking into.

I find that it is true, as the Senator from Oregon described, that large tracts of land in Washington which were worthless had been released and lieu lands taken up in valuable portions of Oregon. But what has this Bureau to do with that? What are the facts? Let us be just to everybody. Nobody intends to accuse any man falsely nor condemn any man unjustly. The truth is that was done under a construction of the law by the Land Office some years ago, and one of the first objections to it that was made within the Government itself was made by the Bureau of Forestry and personally by Gifford Pinchot, the Chief Forester

The Senator from Minnesota, who was most active in repealing that law to which a false meaning had been given by this construction of the Land Office will bear me out in that. Mr. Pinchot from first to last was active not only in suggesting in his report, which I will ask to have inserted in my remarks, but in every other way, that that thing which he himself characterized as a wrong should be undone and that the impossibility of a repetition of that wrong should be absolutely assured.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana the date of that report?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Nineteen hundred and four. I have written out a statement about this matter, because I wanted it to be accurate, and I will read it.

The so-called "lieu land law," which permitted the exchange of lands in forest reserves for lands outside, was passed June 4, 1807, before Pinchot, the Forester, came into the Government service as Chief Forester. Whether or not its meaning was erroneously interpreted by the Secretary of the Interior, so as to extend its action to railroad and other lands not contemplated by Congress, is not the question. Without doubt the law was a by Congress, is not the question. Without doubt the law was a bad one and worked great injury to the Government. It was recommended for repeal February 13, 1905 (the Senator from Minnesota had charge of that), by the Public Lands Commission—and I hold in my hand the report—of which this man Pinchot, the Chief Forester, was a member, and it is my understanding that it was some his intitution that the Commission. standing that it was upon his initiative that the Commission

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Indiana will do me the justice to bear witness that in no word or suggestion have I intimated, directly or indirectly, any responsibility of Mr. Pinchot for the law or its erroneous construction.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do indeed so recognize. I desire to say to the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Oregon that I am making my remarks at this point rather as an extension of the remarks of those two Senators. I do this because I thought, and I think the Senator thought, that a very great wrong had been done, and it was connected in my mind, I will say to the Senator-as an impression such as we gather in debate, until I examined it—with the Forestry Bureau. But when I looked up the Senator's remarks I find that he is entirely right in what he says, and so is the Senator from Oregon in what he says.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to make a suggestion in connection with the point he is now discussing?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let me read this first, so that it will not be broken into.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am afraid we will pass away from the point.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will be through in a moment.

I think, perhaps, the first man in the whole Department who recognized the bad features of this law, and did it quickly, and who immediately took steps, as he always does, to correct a wrong whether he committed it or not—and in this instance we all know it was committed in the Land Office-to immediately correct it was Mr. Pinchot. The Forestry Service never did have anything to do with the wrongs of which you so justly complain, except to suggest and help in correcting them.

I hold in my hand the report of the Land Commission, made in 1904, upon which the President recommended the repeal of this law, and of this Commission the man who is now Chief Forester, at the head of this Bureau, was a member. I hold in my hand—I will not stop to read it, but the Senate can see where the blue pencil mark is, and I shall ask leave to insert in my remarks—the recommendation of this Commission, more the recommendation of this Commission, upon which the remedial action of Congress was taken.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LIEU LANDS.

Careful study has been given by your Commission to the subject of forest-reserve lieu-land selections. These selections have given rise to great scandal, and have led to the acquisition by speculators of much valuable timber and agricultural land and its consolidation into large holdings. Furthermore, the money loss to the Government and the people from the selection of valuable lands in lieu of worthless areas has been very great. There has been no commensurate return in the way of increased settlement and business activity. Public opinion concerning lieu-land selections, by rallroads in particular, has reached an acute stage. The situation is in urgent need of a remedy, and your Commission recommends the repeal of the laws providing for lieu-land selections.

stage. The situation is in urgent need of a remedy, and your Commission recommends the repeal of the laws providing for lieu-land selections.

A partial remedy by Executive action has already been applied by carefully locating the boundaries of new forest reserves, and thus limiting lieu-land selections to comparatively insignificant areas. The last annual message to Congress declares definitely that—

"The making of forest reserves within railroad and wagon-road landgrant limits will hereafter, as for the past three years, be so managed as to prevent the issue, under the act of June 4, 1897, of base for exchange or lieu selection (usually called scrip). In all cases where forest reserves within areas covered by land grants appear to be essential to the prosperity of settlers, miners, or others the Government lands within such proposed forest reserves will, as in the recent past, be withdrawn from sale or entry pending the completion of such negotiations with the owners of the land grants as will prevent the creation of so-called scrip."

There are now lands in private ownership within existing forest reserves, and similar lands must to a limited extent be included in new reserves. Therefore, a method is required by which the Government may obtain control of nonagricultural holdings within the boundaries of these reserves. Your Commission recommends the following flexible plan: Upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, when the public interest so demands, the Secretary of the Interior should be authorized, in his discretion, to accept the relinquishment to the United States of any tract of land within a forest reserve covered by an unperfected bona fide claim lawfully initiated or by a patent, and to grant to the owner in lieu thereof a tract of unappropriated, vacant, surveyed, nonmineral public land in the same State or Territory and of approximately equal area and value as determined by an examination, report, and specific description by public surveys of both tracts, to be made on the ground

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I now yield to the Senator from Wyo-

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the opportune moment has gone by, but still I will put it in.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go right ahead.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator has spoken of the fact that he is convinced that a great amount of worthless land within the reserves was by operation of the lieu-land law ex-changed for a very large amount of valuable timber land out-I would ask him if he does not believe that that emphasizes the righteousness of the contention of those who have opposed the administration of the forestry policy, that many of the reserves were improvidently created? In other words, that much land has been included within them which ought not to have been included? And, further, I ask the Senator if this worthless land had not been included improvidently in reserves as timber land, would it have been possible for the railroad companies to have exchanged that land for valuable land outside, thus giving rise to these great timber scandals?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I will say to the Senator exactly

But so far as concerns this Bureau and its work, and that is the subject we are now considering, what I have read, what we all agree to, is that all of the establishment of the reserves that may have been bad, was before the scientific system that is now being practiced came into use.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. With all due respect to the Senator's logic, we can not accept that premise. The complaint that is made is made against the administration of the forest reserves

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will come to that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Whether it has been under the Interior Department or under the Agricultural Department, or under Mr. Pinchot or whoever it has been under. This dissatisfaction is not aimed at Gifford Pinchot. make that perfectly plain and clear now. It is aimed at the policy which has prevailed since the establishment of forest reserves

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now pardon me, before the Senator asks me a question. Right there, I went over in some detail, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, and I am not going over it again, on account of that, the actual administration, just what the Department does, to answer, without getting into any controversy, the suggestion which has been made that the tangible administration of the Bureau is in any wise imperfect even.

We can not attack the creation of reserves to-day, which everybody admits are faithfully, carefully, and with scientific accuracy created, and whose administration is as perfect as knowledge and integrity can make it, merely because in the past some person else, before this administration had anything to do with it, may have done wrong, one of which wrongs this very man himself, as I have shown, helped to correct.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will.

Mr. CARTER. The situation of which complaint is made presented this aspect, to wit: This Government owned large areas of very valuable timber land. The ownership of the Government over the land was undisputed. The superb character of the timber growing upon the land no one questioned and everybody knew. That character of land was not included in forest reservations until a lot of destitute, barren land in Arizona and elsewhere had been included in forest reserves—land which at the time of such inclusion was largely in the ownership of railroad companies, and that private ownership of these barren lands gave to the railroad companies the right to exchange the barren lands for the superb timber lands to which I referred.

Now permit me to ask why these great, superb, and valuable timber lands were not first withdrawn as forest reservation, so to be protected from the rapacious grasp of the land-grant railroad, seeking lieu land for its trifling land in Arizona and elsewhere?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The original fault was in Congress, which made the law capable of the construction the Land Department put upon it.

Mr. President-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let me answer your question. The secondary fault was in the Land Department for putting that construction upon it and the remedy for which—and let us spend no more time on that point, because the Senator ought generously to admit it—was suggested by the present Chief of the Bureau. So the fault, whatever there is, lies with us.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator inform us now why it was, when this great body of splendid timber land was in peril, the power of the Government was not exercised to protect it by withdrawing it and putting it in a forest reserve, and thus beyond the grasp of the lieu-land speculator?

Mr. BEVERIDGE, That has been a long time ago, and was because of the law which we ourselves had passed——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now pardon me. I have gone over this two or three times—and which this Bureau, and the head of this Bureau as one of this Commission, was the first to suggest the

Mr. CARTER. But the law which allowed poor land to be withdrawn certainly allowed good timber land to be likewise withdrawn. Why was not the good land withdrawn first?

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I would like to ask a question of the Senator from Montana. How long was it after the Secretary of the Interior had made the ruling he has mentioned before Congress acted and repealed the statute permitting the selection of good lands for the bad lands surrendered?

Mr. CARTER. From the very beginning it was within the power of the Interior Department to protect all the valuable timber land in the United States by including it in a forest reserve before any barren land at all was put in a forest reserve. The policy pursued was to put the barren land in forest reservations first and leave the superb timber land open, to be taken in exchange for the base lands in the forest re-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If that was the policy, it never has been the policy under the present administration of the office.

Mr. CARTER. I refer to things done and not to policy. refer to accomplished facts and public records and not to chimerical policies or uncertain data.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is rhetoric, but as a matter of fact the Senator must be as fair to me as I was to him and admit, and not only admit, but gladly assert, and I know the Senator will, that none of the things of which the Senator complains had its source in the present administration of the Forestry Bureau.

Mr. CARTER. I admit that Mr. Pinchot complained early and earnestly of the law.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I place the responsibility where I think it belongs

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right.

Mr. CARTER. On the shoulders of those who so connived with the construction of this law as to pass to the land-grant railroads the splendid timber lands of Washington, Idaho, and western Montana in exchange for chaparral land in Arizona.

EFFECTIVE ADMINISTRATION OF THE NATIONAL FORESTS.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I heartily agree with the Senator.

Mr. President, I have examined briefly the policy, the three grounds of public good upon which this whole forest-reserve system rests. Now, as to the question of administration, by which we mean the management of the reserves, it includes several things. After the reserves have been located in the pains-taking way they are, as I have shown here by these maps and by the instructions to the locators of reserves, they are remapped. They are classified as to trees. There is now under the actual practical administration of this Bureau 128,000,000 acres, I believe. The Senator from Montana will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. CARTER. One hundred and twenty-seven million acres. Mr. BEVERIDGE. One hundred and twenty-seven million Now, through that runs a great system of forest paacres. trol. It is policed by a network of forest rangers. One Senator yesterday referred to the fact that the examination of the land could not have been thorough, because one man had gone over 4,000,000 acres in two weeks. Was it not that? It was something like that, in any event, Mr. President. What does that mean? Merely that instead of cutting down the appropriation for the proper care of the reserves it ought to be increased. As a matter of fact, the forest policing is very careful, thorough, systematic. They police the forests, and I will tell in a minute what that means. If any man thinks that a forest police is not valuable, I shall show in a moment that there is no individual service in this Government that is more valuable or more delicate.

This policing is done by the rangers-900 of them employed last year to patrol 100,000,000 acres of land-one ranger to 110,000 acres, or 172 square miles. In the highly profitable forests of Prussia there is one forest guard on the average to every 1.7 square miles. Small wonder that the cost of administration in the United States in spite of the higher scale of wages has been kept below that of any other European country except Russia. The cost of administration has been officially reported for various countries as follows:

Year,	State.	Govern- ment forests,	Actual expendi- ture on manage- ment of State forests.		Percent- age of gross in-
			Total.	Per acre.	come ex- pended.

The Forest Service is now expending annually, in administering the reserves, 1.6 cents per acre. Doubtless it should spend more, and must spend more as use of the reserves increases, for wise use means supervision and supervision means expense. Every live tree that is cut on the reserves is first marked by the forest ranger's axe; every log that is sold is scaled; and this is but one of their many duties, which include guarding the range against trespass and the forests against fire. And all this with one ranger to 172 square miles! It needs no further evidence to show that these are not invalids, or Eastern tenderfeet, or college-bred impractical theorists. They are men of the West, woodsmen, cowboys, lumberjacks—men who can ride the mountain trails and live a frontiersman's life. As to their efficiency, the record of forest fires throws some illumination on that point. I shall have something to say on that subject presently.

The next thing that the Forest Service does in the actual administration, after the test of the trees, after the marking of the "ripe" or mature timber, after arranging for the sale of that and the "down" timber, is to make trails and build roads, so that it is possible to communicate with one part of the reservation from another, and, further, so that if any agricultural lands are taken up by homesteaders there is a system of communication.

Then along this road there are built telephone lines, so that if in one portion of the forest a fire starts a ranger who finds himself unable to put it out may instantly telephone for help, so that men may be sent there and extinguish the fire while it is still young. Also, they build bridges, so that instead of a wild, ruinous, and rotting tangle of forest land you have a forest land which is woven together by trails, by a network of roads, and by telephones. You have the "ripe" timber cut and taken off so as to increase the growth of that which is left. You have the "down" timber disposed of by selling it instead of permitting it to rot. You create a natural and healthy and perpetual forest, and therefore a profitable forest.

SUCCESS OF PROTECTION AGAINST FOREST FIRES.

Mr. President, about the question of fires. In conversation yesterday I said that one of the most valuable services the Forest Service does was to preserve the forests from fires. I myself have had a little experience with forest fires and considerable observation about them, and there are Senators here from the West who have had a great deal more. It was suggested to me that the men who put out the fires are not the foresters, but really farmers. But that shows that there is still not as much knowledge in the Senate or the country as there ought to be as to what this Bureau is doing in the way of practical administration; because nearly all the fires that are now started in these mighty western forests are extinguished before they are old fires.

When a forest fire gets under way hardly all the farmers in a State could stop it; and I, in common with other Senators, have seen great areas of forest land, where millions—and I might also be accurate in saying tens of millions—of dollars' worth of Government property has been destroyed in less than two weeks' time. Then this is another part of its administration, and so excellent has it been—and I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to this, because he will know better than I—so excellent has this fire protection been that the entire West has been practically clear of smoke during the summer time for the last two years.

Mr. President, that last circumstance is something which, to those who live near great forest districts, is of absolutely incalculable consequence. I myself have seen in the forests of the Northeast mighty conflagrations raging which swept away villages and towns; and in one such fire, I remember, more than a hundred human beings lost their lives. I have seen, and the Senator from Montana has seen much more than I, the whole atmosphere clouded for weeks with smoke from these criminal acts of negligence—because that is what they are. When the Forest Service of the United States stops one of these fires they have saved more money to the Government than ten appropriations like this. We speak of economy, but we mean economy of resources, and trees are resources and soil is a resource as much as actual dollars.

The Forest Service keeps careful records of all fires on the reserves. These include even the smallest fires, which are put out before they have covered more than a few square rods—fires which, but for the vigilance of the forest officers, might become great conflagrations, but which are extinguished without cost beyond the salary of the rangers who patrol these forests as a part of their regular duties. During the year 1906, out of a total of 97,000,000 acres under administration, one-eighth of 1 per cent was burned over, and three one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the estimated standing timber was destroyed. Out of over 1,100 fires reported, 450 were extinguished without one cent of extra cost to the Government. Nearly 700 large fires were fought, at a total cost of less than $9,000 for extra labor and supplies. That is pretty good evidence of the efficiency of the protection which the Forest Service gives, at a lower cost per acre, as I have already shown, than any European country except Russia—and Russia's figure is so low because the greater part of her forests are not under administration at all.

INCREASE IN THE FLOW OF STREAMS.

The next thing is the exactly opposite thing, and yet closely connected with it—I am now talking about the actual tangible administration of this Service. The next thing which shows how completely the Service is practical and results in a definite and tangible benefit to the people is whether or not, as a matter of fact, it increases the waterflow in the streams. If we can show that it has kept the West, that mighty area of imperial forests, clear of smoke for two summers, we have vindicated it. But now if we can show, as a matter of fact, it has kept the streams' banks full, we have done more than that.

As a matter of fact, actual stream measurements made in southern California show an increase of 25 per cent in the flow of water since the reserves were created. No wonder the two Senators from California are hearty supporters of this policy. That means life to the people of California. That means prosperity to the people of that region. That means happy homes for hundreds and thousands of people. And so the Senators from California, speaking from actual experience, can testify, as they have so repeatedly testified, to the practical excellence of the tangible administration of these reserves. The same is true eisewhere.

So we see that in all the details of actual administration the Bureau is well-nigh perfect. I do not use that adjective unwittingly or lightly. I do not use it without having something of an official nature to support it. It is my purpose in the Senate to make no statement that I can not substantiate by something recognized as authoritative. I myself have never been greatly impressed by statements, however powerful they may seem, which could not be sustained by authorities.

BUSINESS METHODS OF THE FOREST SERVICE.

The Department's conduct of these reserves has been criticised, even as to its administration here in Washington. This Department and all of the Executive Departments were examined by a commission called "the Keep Commission." I do not know whether that Commission is very popular or not, and the question is not whether it is. The question is whether what that Commission found of this Department is true. I wish to state in the beginning that a member of that Commission was Mr. Pinchot. But the man who testified before the House Committee on the Expenditures of the Agricultural Department was not Mr. Pinchot. It was Mr. Garfield, who is about to be the Secretary of the Interior. They went through all the Departments and one model department was found as to its actual administration, and particularly as to its system of auditing accounts, particularly as to the extreme care it took of the people's money. And so admirable was this Bureau found to be that it has been taken as an example upon which to recast and remodel other Departments and bureaus of the Government.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator refers to the Keep Commission.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. This statement was given to me by the chairman of the House Committee on the Expenditures of the Agricultural Department, Mr. LITTLEFIELD, of Maine. His committee has had hearings on this very question; and it is from the testimony of Mr. Garfield I am now going to read; and then I will repeat what the chairman of the House committee authorized me to quote on this floor as to what his report

The CHAIRMAN. State what you found with reference to the relative efficiency of the Forest Service as a whole as compared with other bureaus that you examined.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee were unanimous in the belief that the efficiency in the Service was so much greater than we found in the other offices that we used many of the methods we found in vogue there as a basis for recommendations for changes in other branches of the Government service, believing that if they were put in vogue generally throughout the service there would be an enormous increase in efficiency in the other offices where it was adopted

[Extracts from statement of Hon. James R. Garfield, Commissioner of Corporations, Department of Commerce and Labor, before the House Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department, Saturday, February 16, 1907.]

The CIMIRMAN, Did the Commission (on Department methods) examine the Bureau of Forestry in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. GARPIELD. It did.

The CIMIRMAN Will you be kind enough to state what they found with reference to its organization and its efficiency as a Bureau?

Mr. GARPIELD. As a member of the Commission I personally methods of accounting, the methods of bookkeeping, the method of safeguarding the supplies and the issue of supplies, the system of handling correspondence and vouchers, the system of filing, the methods in vogue for attending to the work of the aforesaid Service, so far as the methods of the office were concerned—that is, the reports of the agents who were the general inspectors in the different districts, examining the reports sent in by these officers, and following through the actions by the Forest Service upon those reports or recommendations. The general result of this investigation was that the committee unanimously of the action of the committee and system in force in the Forest Service was one of the compart of the system of, first, the arrangement of salaries, the classes and grades of employees, and the methods of promotion seem to afford the opportunity for the selection of the most efficient cumployees tail the records of the various employees and the suggestions made by subordinate orders to their superior officers in many matters connected with administration of the personnel question. There had been in the Forest Service a remarkable movement in the personnel matters. I mean that it was evident from the records that employees were reduced as shown by their records, had been promoted when opportunity afforded and when it was for the best interest of the Service.

The organization of the file service was at that time undergoing revision. There were some

The CHAIRMAN. The committee must have spent some time examining

The CHARMAN, The Countries of the Charman and the Charman and

The CHAIEMAN. What is your judgment as to the lump-sum method? Mr. GARFIELD. I think it is very much the more satisfactory method of appropriation. It of course requires a very much greater degree of inspection and care on the part of the head of the bureau, but with that inspection and care a man can accomplish very much more work with the same amount of money and get very much better results from the clerks under that system.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see any indications of that kind of inspection and care in the Forestry Bureau?

Mr. GARFIELD. I did.

Mr. Garfield. Yes; we found conditions of that character in the Forest Service. Up until that time there had been the general supposition that cost keeping could only be successfully applied to those bureaus or Departments that engaged in manufacturing. That is not true. Cost keeping can be applied equally well to clerical work, and the system of the Forest Service was at that time being worked out for the determination accurately of the cost of the Service, both outside and inside.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have an inefficient man that discloses it?

Mr. GARFIELD. It discloses it instantly. And in regard to the Forest Service, we found that same method of handling their business was being installed there, and had been in great measure carried on there before. At the end of each month, by a system of accounting which was exceedingly simple and had been worked out on the very best of accurate and looseleaf ledger methods, the Forester was able to tell exactly what his general balance was, all the moneys expended, all outstanding liabilities, and the allotments made to carry on the various characters of work in the different reserves; and there were shown on this balance sheet not only the expenditures that had been made, but those that had been authorized, and the details of the appropriations, so that at the end of each month the Forester was able to tell whether or not his orders had been carried out and his subordinates were keeping within the allotments, and that the total was within the appropriations made by Congress for the work. The CHAIRMAN. It would be impossible to have a deficiency of any consequence if all the Departments of the Government were conducted on this plan?

Mr. GARFIELD. Absolutely impossible.

The CHAIRMAN. State what you found with reference to the relative efficiency of the Forest Service as a whole, as compared with other Bureaus that you examined.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee were unanimous in the belief that the efficiency in that service was so much greater than we found in the other offices that we used many of the methods we found in vogue there as a basis for recommendations for changes in other branches of the Government service, believing that if that was put in vogue generally throughout the service there would be an enormous increase in efficiency in the other offices where it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you stayed about two weeks there. Did you do that work personally, or were the whole commission there for the two weeks?

you do that work personally, or were the whole commission there for the two weeks?

Mr. Garfield. Yes; we spent one, two, or three hours a day, as the case might be, and the members of that commission went personally through every division of the office, and all the files of the office. I personally went over these records in detail, and the office accounts in detail. I called for various cases to see what the conditions of the files were. I called for letters on subjects that I knew nothing of except in a general way, connected with forestry, and the files would be handed to me and I would look through the files in these special cases to see what condition they were in, and to see whether the system as adopted actually worked out.

The Chairman. To see if it gave concrete results?

Mr. Garfield. Yes, sir; to see if it gave concrete results. I found that it did.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This is not the report of the Commission. This is the testimony before the House committee of one of the principal members of the Keep Commission, who in a few days will be the Secretary of the Interior of the Government of the United States.

Now, I am permitted by the chairman of the House committee [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] to state with his express authority that after his committee had fairly heard all of the testimony which anybody chose to give on this subject, and the usual notices had been sent out and opportunity had been given to those who complained to appear before them; and after one of the Senators from this Chamber had appeared before them, he, the chairman of the House committee, is now completing his report. He has it entirely finished, I think, and it will be printed by Monday. The chairman of the House committee specifically authorized me to state that the report of his committee without a single dissent would substantiate in the fullest degree the testimony of Mr. Garfield, which is only a summary of all the evidence given before it.

Mr. President, in view of this showing, more formal and complete than any similar showing that I in my short public experience remember, I think the Senators who have suggested that the administration of the office might not be wholly admirable will do us all the credit to suggest that it was not with reference to the administration, but to the original policy, of these reserves in which the wrong was committed, and to correct which this Chief Forester was the speediest as well as the most vigilant man.

THE GOVERNMENT A "MERCHANT."

The next question was, and it was urged repeatedly, that the "Government ought not to become a merchant." Oh, that is merely a catch word. "The Government become a merchant." Mr. President, why should not the Government charge for the grasses growing on the great ranges which are in these reserves as much as it eught to charge for the wood, the "ripe" and 'down" timber on them?

Mr. SPOONER. That argument-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course. Mr. SPOONER. That argument proves too much, because it would prevent the Government from selling its lands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To be sure it would; one could say "The Government ought not become a real-estate dealer." And here is another thought that suggests itself. If the Government ought to give the stockmen of the West land upon which to fatten their cattle, for instance, then why should not the Gov-ernment furnish hay to the farmers in the East? The analogy is complete.

THE ALTERNATIVE.

I do not think that any tangible criticism can be made upon the selling of timber instead of allowing what has occurred in the past to occur again—the thefts of the vast areas of timber lands belonging to the Government; the sawing of that timber up into lumber; the putting of the proceeds of that transaction into the pockets of men who became the great timber barons of the West.

An extract from a published letter of the President written to Senator Heyburn under date of June 13, 1905, illustrates this matter:

One specially interesting article contains an interview in which the opinion is expressed that the recent temporary withdrawal in the Coeur d'Alene and Lewiston districts was encouraged by certain large corporations, which corporations already hold large bodies of timber land in Idaho and adjacent States. It is argued that if this temporary withdrawal is made permanent these corporations will be the only people who can purchase the timber from the Government, and that they will be able to make purchases at a very low figure and in that way stiffe competition. As the gentleman who advances this opinion is expecting to locate, by means of so-called "scrip," large areas of timber lands in northern Idaho in the interest of certain eastern capitalists, it is obvious that he himself, at least, stands in no great fear of the competition of those corporations. But the fear expressed in the article is chimerical. In reality, in such cases as this, the establishment of a forest reserve offers the fairest possible solution of the questions at issue. At present, since by far the greater part of the lands are unsurveyed, the timber can not be lawfully disposed of. Just as soon as a forest reserve is established the mature timber is for sale, and for sale to the settler, the miner, and the stockman, to individuals, companies, and corporations. It is for sale in small or large amounts. Moreover, the Government is at liberty to sell as much or as little as conditions may warrant, and at such a price as circumstances may call for. But it is for sale; it is not to be stolen, and this simple fact accounts for much of the hostility to our policy. No one can force the Government to sell as lingle stick of timber from a national forest reserve if by so doing the best interests of all the people would be injured. What better guaranty is possible against unjust competition?

Mr. President, I myself within the last five years have been convertives of the contains and corporations. There were the contained and the contains the

Mr. President, I myself within the last five years have been over three mountains in Colorado and in California. They had been at no distant date heavily timbered to their tops. But when I rode over them they were as bare of a tree as the wall of this Senate Chamber, every stick of it having been cut off, every stick of it belonging to the Government, and every stick of it taken by some man or some company, upon the proceeds of which they became enormously wealthy, and for which the Government of the United States never got a dollar or a cent. think it far better to preserve that forest, to sell off the down and the ripe timber, than to continue a policy that has devastated so much of the country as that policy devastated.

That was not all of that damage; for after those monarchs of the early western lumber camps had stripped the natural cloth-ing from the mountains, and the rains descended, they swept off in torrential floods, filling the valleys and washing them out, whereas hereafter when retimbered the rain will go out gradually into the streams of the valleys.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator to say that timber from an entire section, including three mountains, had been taken by somebody without authority of law?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I say I myself have been over three mountains in Colorado and in California altogether, separate peaks. I have one of them in my mind quite as plainly as I see the Senator now, from which the timber had been stripped utterly, and I was informed-

Mr. ALDRICH. Without authority of law?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The old stumpages looked as if it had been cut some years before. It was six years ago that I saw it. I was informed on authority sufficient for me to make the state-munity. It was partially to correct such things as this that the forest-reserve system was established, and the result of the destruction of the forest-reserve system will be to restore such a condition.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.
Mr. CARTER. I think I can throw some light on the legality of the proceedings referred to. More than twenty years ago Congress passed a law, which remains on the statute books to this day, authorizing the cutting of timber upon mineral lands of the United States for mining and milling purposes. No doubt the mountain peaks referred to by the Senator from Indiana are classified as mineral lands, and, no doubt, further, the timber was cut for mining and milling purposes. The peaks have not been named nor have they been closely identified, but I venture the assertion that they are in a mineral belt and classified as mineral lands and lands of no value for any other purpose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think quite likely they are in the minhave been under color of that that it was done. I know that the act of June 3, 1878, to which the Senator refers, has been used as a cloak for denuding nonmineral lands of the United States, and I have in mind a decision from the Senator's own State (Lynch v. United States, 138 Fed. Rep., 535) where damages were recovered by the Government because of such a fraud. The State referred to is no exception. The mineral land laws are, themselves, made the means of defrauding the United States of its timbered and nonmineral lands, and I am informed that at this time an association of sixteen persons, controlled by one of its members, is asserting a claim under such laws for approximately 250,000 acres of heavily timbered land in the State of California under the guise of compliance with the mineral land laws and that no mines exist upon such lands. Government geologists have examined a large part of this land and the investigation is being continued at great ex-California does not present an exception to conditions existing in other States. Numerous frauds of similar character explain the disappearance of timber from the Government's lands. I do not know whether those lands which I saw had been cut over as mineral lands, but one thing I do know—there were not any mines near them and not any mills near them, nor the remains of any. As a matter of fact, we know that before the establishment of this Service what very naturally occurs, because human beings are the same every place and at all times, did occur, and shamefully occur, and not only in the far West, but as the Senator from Wisconsin said, in his own State. I refer to what I saw myself in his own State, which he will confirm—a thing that shocked me and every other man who learns about it.

I spent many weeks in the very heart of what was once a State reserve—there is not much of it left now—and I was informed by those on the ground who knew, that after the great lumber companies had stripped the State as the Senator from Wisconsin described, and in the manner he described, and had run out of forests upon which to pursue their further slaughter, they went to the legislature (this was many years ago) and by some means or other the legislature repealed the law creating that reserve, and the magnificent forest reserve, though it was conserving the water sources that supply Wisconsin on both sides of the water divide, will within a year or two see the last of its existence.

Mr. President, it has been stated several times that this policy was preventing the settlement of these lands and the development of these States by homesteaders. A rather pathetic and vivid picture was drawn by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] of the prairie schooners, the white-covered wagons, sweeping through in great trains, finding nowhere to deposit emigrants that they might build homes.

ALL AGRICULTURAL LAND OPEN TO SETTLEMENT,

The truth is, Mr.-President, that there is not a foot of these forest reserves that are fit for agriculture that are not open to entry under the act of June 11, 1906. There is not a bit of mineral land that is not subject to entry under the proper law. Where minerals exist and where the land is suitable for agriculture it is open to entry; but it can not be entered for the purpose of taking off wood and stone and mineral except by ment here that every stick of it had been taken without authority of law and that every stick of it actually belonged to the Government of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a very singular condition of affairs to exist in any community.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is, and it did not exist in the com-

That is how many people have been made "homeless" by preserving the In one reserve there were only four applications, and those, Mr. President, are being examined as to whether, first, they are really agricultural lands, and to know, second, whether or not the entries are genuine.

Now, Mr. President, I wish it was earlier in the day, because I have here, and if it becomes necessary hereafter I will exhibit to the Senate, a very thorough book of photographs, showing what kind of land these reserves cover, showing the barren land, the partly barren land, the woodland, and generally the tremendously mountainous character of the country. There are perhaps more than a score, perhaps two score, of these photographs, so that Senators can see by the testimony of the photographic lens, which falsifies not, just what kind of land the settlers are being kept off of, even if they were being kept off at all.

Mr. PROCTOR rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield. Mr. PROCTOR. No; I will wait until the Senator gets through.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator that I will get through when I have completed the examination of the subject in hand.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator, further, that days have been taken here with an attack upon the general policy, and very little time has been taken up by those who have studied it, in an attempt to lay before the Senate and the country the real conditions of things. I shall be through in a few minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do. Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator for his courtesy. rose simply to say that the chairman of the committee has suggested to me that he is going to ask for an evening session to further discuss this amendment and the Appalachian and White Mountain amendment. I wish now to enter a protest against any special consideration of the Appalachian and White Mountain amendment at the evening session. I shall not be able to be here, and I have been waiting all day to reach it. I have been waiting for three days to reach that amendment. I hope the Senator will not include it in his request. If he wishes an evening session to further discuss this amendment, which I understand is going out on a point of order and has been discussed for three or four days, I have no objection; but I think he ought not to compel those of us who have been patiently waiting here to discuss a question which is of great interest to a large number of States of the American Union to have it discussed when there are simply a handful of Senators present at an evening session.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope there will be no limitation upon what shall be done at the evening session. I hope we shall simply take a recess for the purpose of finishing this bill. The discussion has gone on for four or five days upon a matter which everybody in this Chamber understands will go out immediately upon a point of order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not the appropriation. I am not talking about the thing that will go out on a point of order, I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. The chairman of the committee has already notified the Senate that there is no special objection to the So we are discussing things that are practically, agreed upon already. I hope we will be able to close that discussion in a reasonable length of time. In any event, I hope there will be no limitation upon what shall be done this evening. I hope that simply a recess will be taken, with a view of concluding the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The bill can not be concluded this evening unless a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? Mr. ALDRICH. I trust there will be a quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was going to state, in the way of reply to what the Senator said, that there can be no forcing process at the evening session unless there is a quorum here.

Mr. ALDRICH. There can be no forcing process of any kind in the Senate, so far as I know. We are not obliged to listen to gentlemen if we do not want to do so; and if there is a quorum here to do whatever business is to be done, that is all any of us have a right to expect.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all. The Senator does not expect that there will be a quorum?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there will be a quorum. Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me? Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock the Senate shall take a recess until 8.15, the evening to be devoted to the further discussion of the grazing amendment and this pending amendment, unless we can reach a vote before 6 upon it.

In regard to the Appalachian amendment, there are some Senators who are willing to speak upon it this evening, and I suppose, although the Senator from New Hampshire may not wish to speak this evening, he will have an opportunity to do The request I make will be with the understanding that the evening is to be for discussion and that no vote will be taken.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think that is a mistake. It seems to me so. I see no reason for having an evening session unless we are going to go on with the real consideration of this bill.

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scorr], who to-day reported the Military Academy appropriation bill, gave notice that he would try to call it up this evening. I do not think he ought to be precluded from doing that.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For what purpose?

jection to the amendment that is being discussed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand that also. I understand it as thoroughly as the Senator from Vermont understands it. am speaking precisely to that, and I understand why I am speaking precisely to that. I wish to say further that it will not avail to in any wise attempt to prevent a presentation at this conclusion, immediately before we vote on the whole forest subject, because it is important that not only the Senate but the country should get this whole business before it. It will not avail anything. I understand perfectly well what is before the Senate. I understand perfectly well that we are agreed, and I am glad that this discussion has brought on an agreement.

Mr. PROCTOR. With reference to what the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean] have said, I am just as anxious as they are to go on this evening, and I should like to have it understood that we meet at 8.15 and remain in session until the bill is completed and passed, but I did not suppose that I could get that agreement. Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do; yes.
Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope we shall simply take a recess until 8.15. We can not make any arrangement, under our rules, to close debate out in a specified time, or to say when a vote on an amendment shall be taken, but it is very important in the present condition of public business that we shall press forward as much as we can to a conclusion. I think we ought to go on with this bill to-night and try to finish it and get it out of the way. A week from Monday Congress adjourns by law, and there are a great many important matters that are pressing for consideration. Therefore we ought to occupy all the time in trying to get legislation advanced, and I hope that we shall simply agree for a recess until 8.15, to go on with the business of the Senate, whatever it may be.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I decline to yield further. Senators can conduct this interesting conversation after I get through my remarks, which will not be long; that is, after the Senator from Massachusetts gets through, for I do not desire to interfere with the Senator.

JUSTICE OF CHARGE FOR WATER CONSERVATION.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, there is just one further point that I want to make as to this forest reserve, and I make it in order that I may sum up in a compact fashion what would be the result if the Forest Service were destroyed, or even impaired, and I am sure that nobody really wants that to be done. But the discussion has taken a scope and there has been a great deal said and a great deal of instantaneous and uninformed alarm-I have observed that Senators come into the Chamber sometimes when a subject is being discussed, and it takes on to them a formidable aspect merely because they have not been informed. So Senators were alarmed the other day when it was stated that this Forest Service controlled the distribution of water after it left the reserve.

Of course, we all know now that it does nothing of the kind. But here is what does occur, Mr. President, and this is what the Department was criticised for: The great water companies want to take water located within these forest reserves. come into the Government forest land and get the exclusive use of the ground through which they run their pipes to their water, and they have that use. The Government charges them for that. Mr. President, what is the basis of that charge? Not only the exclusive use of the land for their pipes, but this:

The Government does not propose to charge for the water used. That is granted directly by the State. It charges only for the resources, opportunities, and services which it furnishes to the power company. These are of a twofold nature: First, the great storage reservoir formed by the maintenance of the forest cover which holds back the water so that it will flow during the dry season. Without this sponge reservoir the companies must spend millions in the construction of dams. Second, the Government furnishes in that part of the forest reserve traversed by the company's water conduits a fall, without which the water granted by the State and conserved by the forest reserve could not produce electrical energy. The Government proposes to charge for this conservation and this fall such reasonable amount only as can not make the prudent business man hesitate about carrying out his proposed water-power project.

These water companies now want these Government services for nothing? When that statement was made here the other day the Senator from California [Mr. Perkins], who is sitting on my left, said, "If that is done—these charges now made by the Department abolished—it will create one of the most enormous monopolies in all the West." No Senator on this floor more than another would want any great interest to be benefited that ought not to be.

RESULTS THAT WOULD FOLLOW ABANDONMENT OF RESERVES.

The result of destroying the forest-reserve system or of impairing it would be to benefit temporarily just three classes of

The first are the water companies last named, who, instead of paying for the privilege of taking over the forest lands and the waters which the Forest Service conserves, want it exclusively Their benefit would last just so long as it would take for the effects of forest destruction to become operative upon the flow of their dwindling streams.

The second class of men who would be benefited would be the sheep men and the cattlemen, who heretofore have fattened their flocks and their herds upon Government land and given the Government no pay for it. Yet progressive deterioration of the range under unrestricted competition would soon work to their loss

The third would be the great timber firms which characterized a former but recent period of our history in the West and Northwest and in the northern portion of our country, who cut off the magnificent forests, the proceeds of which to-day constitute some of the greatest fortunes of the country, and who, if this Service, which prevents the ravaging of the Nation's forests, is destroyed or is impaired, would do exactly the same thing, to the ultimate ruin of their own industry.

Mr. President, there is the net result of either the destruction or the impairment of the Forest Service.

Mr. President, I think that we have gone pretty thoroughly into this thing. I have tried to do it briefly, and still I have tried not to forget anything. I have here some other data which I shall ask the permission of the Senate to insert in my remarks without reading

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The administrative policy under which the forest reserves are managed was laid down by the Secretary of Agriculture in his letter to the Forester dated February 1, 1905:

his letter to the Forester dated February 1, 1905:

In the administration of the forest reserves it must be clearly borne in mind that all land is to be devoted to its most productive use for the permanent good of the whole people, and not for the temporary benefit of individuals or companies. All the resources of forest reserves are for use, and this use must be brought about in a thoroughly prompt and businesslike manner, under such restrictions only as will insure the permanence of these resources. The vital importance of forest reserves to the great industries of the Western States will be largely increased in the near future by the continued steady advance in settlement and development. The permanence of the resources of the reserves is therefore indispensable to continued prosperity, and the policy of this Department for their protection and use will invariably be guided by this fact, always bearing in mind that the conservative use of these resources in no way conflicts with their permanent value.

You will see to it that the water, wood, and forage of the reserves are conserved and wisely used for the benefit of the home builder first of all, upon whom depends the best permanent use of lands and resources alike. The continued prosperity of the agricultural, lumbering, mining, and live-stock interests is directly dependent upon a permanent and accessible supply of water, wood, and forage, as well as upon the present and future use of these resources under businesslike regulations, enforced with promptness, effectiveness, and common sense. In the management of each reserve local questions will be decided upon local grounds; the dominant industry will be considered first, but with as little restriction to minor industries as may be possible; sudden changes in industrial conditions will be avoided by gradual adjustment after due notice, and where conflicting interests must be reconciled the question will always be decided from the standpoint of the greatest good of the greatest number in the long run.

Mr.

BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I do not know that I should have gone so much into the discussion-but I am glad I have gone into it-if it had not been for the original question of the character of the services rendered by that remarkable public servant, the Chief Forester of the United States, who I have known intimately since I was chairman of the Forestry Committee of the Senate years ago, and whose work I have observed with increasing wonder and admiration—a man who never spares himself mental or physical fatigue. Mr. President, when that man shall have completed his work on earth his monument will be no shaft of stone or image of brass. No! it will be the great and splendid forest reserves reclothed with nature's garment. It will be mighty mountain peaks now bare, then covered with the noble woods Nature once put there and which he has restored. It will be the streams now dry, running bank full for the welfare of the people. It will be human welfare and human happiness.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the pending amendment be temporarily laid aside, and I would ask the attention—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I suggest to the Senator, why not ote on the amendment?

wote on the amendment?

Mr. PROCTOR. It is impossible. I would ask attention to the amendment of the committee at the top of page 47. As I understand, the proposed amendment, beginning at line 25, on page 46, has been agreed to, and I suggested a modification of the amendment on page 47. I wish to withdraw that suggestion and let the amendment stand as it is in print, with the exception of striking out the word "December," in line 7, and inserting the word "March."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont pro-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont proposes an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which vill be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. On page 46, line 25, after the word "Provided," the committee propose to strike out all down to and including the words "municipal government," in line 3, page 47, and to insert: "That any part of this sum used for compensation of or payment of expenses to any officer or other person employed by any State, county, or municipal government shall be reported to Congress in detail on the first Monday of December, 1908."

It is now proposed to strike out the word "December," in line 7 of the amendment, and to insert the word "March."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and the amendment as amended

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator what became of the amendment on pages 44 and 45?

Mr. PROCTOR. We will reach that in a moment. To the amendment on page 44, so far as I know, there is no objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is that a part of the present law?

Mr. PROCTOR. That is exactly the present law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 44, line 13, after the word "foods."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I am aware that the amend-

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I am aware that the amendment on page 45 is subject to a point of order.

Mr. KEAN. I propose to make the point of order.

Mr. PROCTOR. And I think the point of order will be sustained. I asked yesterday to modify that amendment by striking out the last five words, "and to establish standards therefor," hoping it might leave the amendment not subject to the point of order; but, as I am satisfied that the modification makes no difference, I should like to withdraw the modification and let the amendment stand as originally reported. I do so for this reason, that, as it makes no difference in the result, I should like to have printed two or three articles that refer to this question of standards, and the reply of Doctor Wiley to some questions I put to him in writing, asking for a little explanation of what standards meant. I merely ask that so that if the matter should ever come up again we shall be able to have access to it. that can be assented to, I will ask somebody disinterested to kindly raise the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Chair rules on that point of order I should like to know on what it is based?

Mr. LODGE. The point of order is that it is obviously general legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator if it is not exactly the legislation that is now existing law under the last agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President. Mr. McCUMBER. In what respect has the law been changed which in every appropriation bill heretofore has allowed the Secretary of Agriculture to fix standards?

Mr. LODGE. It went out of the last appropriation bill. Mr. GALLINGER. It went out last year on a point of order. Mr. McCUMBER. If it went out last year, that may change its status.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment clearly proposes general legislation.

Mr. PROCTOR. Now, Mr. President, I ask to have printed in a document, rather in the Record, some reports from the State officials. Some of them were made at a hearing of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and some of them have appeared recently in official reports that have not been printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reports referred to by the Senator from Vermont will be printed as a public document.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire what has become of the amendment on page 47?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. That will be open to amendment and discussion when the bill gets into the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be open when the bill reaches the Senate. Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that we might dispose of the amendment on page 71, line 7.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With the Senator's permission, may I ask whether any agreement has yet been reached as to what we are going to do to-night? Mr. ALDRICH. Not yet.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest to the Senator he was rather anxious a moment ago to reach such an agreement.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the chairman suggest that we take a recess from 6 o'clock to a quarter past 8 to proceed to the consideration of public business.

Mr. PROCTOR. I had proposed to do that in some form. I thought that perhaps at 6 o'clock I would move to take a

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like——
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Make the motion now.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest to Sen-Senators occupy the floor. The Chair would suggest to Senators occupy the floor. The Chair will recognize Senators each in turn. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to inquire in regard to an amendment on page 47.
Mr. PROCTOR.

Mr. PROCTOR. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I understood amid some confusion that the amendment on page 47, commencing in line 3, down to and including line 7, was passed over.

Mr. LODGE. No.
Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to raise the point of order to that amendment. I will state, with the permission of the Senate, that that amendment is obnoxious to the laws of many States, my own included. Our State officials could not receive any compensation from the Government for their cooperation. They cooperate without any compensation. I raise the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment has been agreed to, and it would require a vote of the Senate to reconsider it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I preferred very much the re-tention of the House provision, but I agreed, with some reluctance, to the compromise that has been made in order to save There is no question that the House provision is of such a nature that striking it out is in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I insist on my point of order—

Mr. LODGE. I looked into that, and hoped the point of order would lie.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It certainly does not lie in the present parliamentary stage of the amendment, it having been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator can make the point of order in the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I make it now. My point of order is not to the House provision, but to the Senate amendment.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I raise the point of order against it.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order can be raised in the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator can raise the point of order in the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. The confusion was such-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be open to a point of order when the bill reaches the Senate, and the amendment will be reserved, so that the Senator may interpose his point of order.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, in connection with this matter I ask to have inserted in the Record, without reading, a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, February 22, 1907.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR, United States Senate.

Hon. Redfield Proctor,

United States Senate.

Dear Sir: In answer to your inquiry concerning the desirability of retaining the present Senate amendment permitting cooperation with the State authorities, I have to say:

There will doubtless be many cases where State officers will secure samples of goods manufactured without the State and transported in interstate commerce in violation of the food and drugs act. It is highly desirable from an administrative and economic point of view that this Department should be able to pay these State officers for continuing the examination of these food products instead of being forced to bring a Department official into each such case, for the reason that such Department official would not have the necessary collateral information regarding the particular case which is possessed by the State official.

If this Department were required to begin anew the investigation, all the expenses of inspection, analysis, etc., would have to be repeated at a very much larger cost than would possibly be the case if we can have the cooperation of the State authorities.

Another point in which great good would come in economy and efficiency would be the opportunities of employing experts in the States to do special work coming under their immediate supervision and avoiding the necessity of sending a special agent or inspector of customs to do the same work.

These are instances of the ways in which economy and efficiency would be promoted by proper cooperation between the State and national authorities.

James Wilson, Secretary.

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that the amendment on page 71, commencing in line 7, be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. BEVERIDGE and Mr. SPOONER. What amendment is that?

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment on page 71, commencing in line 7.

Mr. CARTER. Before that is disposed of I think some Senators desire to submit a few observations. [Laughter.]
Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the observations can just as well be made after it has been disposed of. I make a point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation. I think we might as well have that decided now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island raises a point of order. What is the point of order?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We have not reached the amendment

Mr. ALDRICH. We reached it and passed it over. We have passed through the whole bill. Mr. KEAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island will state his point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is that the amendment commencing in line 7, page 71, is general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment to which the point of order is addressed is clearly in the nature of general legislation, and he therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. When the point of order was made as to the amendment on page 45, I asked a question of Senators generally as to whether that was not in fact the same as the law of last year. It was immediately answered in the negative; it was stated that it was not the existing law, and not in the appropriation bill of last year. I have here the law of last year, on page 19 of the pamphlet copy of the appropriations act. It reads as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such other experts as he may deem necessary, to ascertain the purity of food products and determine what are regarded as adulterations therein. To investigate, in collaboration with the Bureau of Animal Industry, the chemistry of dairy products and of adulterants used therein, and of the adulterated products, etc.

I do not say that differs materially.

Mr. LODGE. It contains the essential phrase "to establish standards therefor."

Mr. McCUMBER. But we have in here, I think, a provision for establishing a standard.

Mr. GALLINGER. We never have had such a provision. Mr. ALDRICH. If it was in the law of last year, it was clearly legislation and would have then been subject to a point

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The proposition of the Senator to strike out the last five words of that committee amendment-

Mr. ALDRICH. It is too late.
Mr. LODGE. That is withdrawn.
Mr. HANSBROUGH. Should be insisted upon and that would leave the provision, if it is adopted, precisely as the law stands now

Mr. LODGE. The point of order was made, and the amendment was ruled out by the Chair.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And I suggest that that be done when the amendment is reached in the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. If Senators will allow me, I will try to make myself understood. I satisfied myself fully that with these five words stricken out the amendment was still subject to a point of order, and that the modification did not help us any. If the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] had been correct, and if I had not satisfied myself fully that the remaining part of the amendment was just as much subject to a point of order, I should have insisted upon striking out those words; but, as it made no difference, I moved to restore them merely for the sake of submitting some documents, possibly for future use, in regard to the matter. I can say that I do not believe, Mr. President, the question of standards will ever come up again. I think the pure-food law will be administered in a way that will answer every purpose that could be reached by the establishment of standards.

ALDRICH. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether there are any committee amendments which have not been acted upon and which have been passed over? would suggst, if there are, that we take them up in order and dispose of them

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Dispose of what?

Mr. ALDRICH. Any amendments not disposed of.
Mr. PROCTOR. The committee amendment that was under discussion, adding $1,000,000 to the appropriation for the general expenses of the Department of Agriculture, was passed over, and I am now ready

Mr. SPOONER. I desire, if I may be permitted, to ask a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. The pure-food law, as I understand, gave to the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with such chemists and other experts as he deemed necessary to employ, the power, and made it his duty, to ascertain the purity of food products and to determine what should be regarded as adulterations, I Am I wrong about that?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is right about it. Mr. SPOONER. My inquiry is this: How many different acts are required at the same time to vest in a Department officer the same power?

Mr. PROCTOR. The pure-food law specifies no machinery or method. It leaves with the Secretary the right to establish rules and regulations, and I think probably the object might be reached under that general provision. It is not specific at all. I think myself it would have been wise to leave in this provision on page 45, but it was clearly subject to the point of order, and

I had the best authority for saying it would be so held. Mr. SPOONER. I think it is very important to the pure-food law that the power to establish standards be in it, if it is not. I should like to ask the Senator who had charge of the purefood bill whether it contains a provision authorizing the establishment of standards?

Mr. HEYBURN. It specifically did not. One of the most prolonged controversies that we had was related to it, and the Senate decided that there should be no standards established and was successful in keeping that provision out of the law as

Mr. SPOONER. I think the last observations I had the honor to address to the Senate on the pure-food law were in support of a proposition that without power to establish standards or without fixing standards in the act it would be very, very difficult of enforcement in the courts.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.
Mr. HEYBURN. To reopen the discussion of that question would result in somewhat prolonged debate, as it did on that occasion.

Mr. SPOONER. This amendment was intended to supply that?

Mr. HEYBURN. It was intended to do what the Senate refused to do in enacting that law.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes. Does the Senator regard it as impor-

Mr. HEYBURN. I regard it as very important, because in the pure-food law we defined what should constitute adulteration and left it to the courts, where it belongs, to say whether or not the facts of each particular case brought it within the rule.

Mr. SPOONER. Not to the courts, but to the jury.
Mr. HEYBURN. The jury is a part of the court.
Mr. SPOONER. In a sense, and yet it has been decided that that is not a standard which can be administered by the court.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to say, if the Senator will permit me, that the pure-food law was framed upon the idea that by defining what should constitute adulteration the courts would be able to apply that rule which we established specifically to the facts in each particular case, and we thought that the safer rule.

Mr. SPOONER. I think there is no rule at all. I am glad to know it was considered of some consequence in the pure-food law that the power to establish standards be given; and I think it is. I think it ought to be adopted if the Senate is in favor of that law.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest, as a matter of procedure, that we commence at the beginning of the bill and act upon such committee amendments as have not already been acted upon.

Mr. PROCTOR. Directly. I wish to say, in connection with what the Senator from Wisconsin has said, that I was just as earnest as he could be to try to retain this clause as to standards, but when I became satisfied that the point of order would lie against the amendment with that clause in, and equally against it with that clause out, I concluded to make no further contest upon it. I will say that the liquor interest has been especially active against it. They have had their lobby and lawyers here this winter, and some of their publications—and I shall ask consent to have two extracts printed in the Record-especially Mida's Criterion and Journal, of Chicago, had articles upon the necessity of opposing that very amendment.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In Mida's Criterion and Journal, devoted to the wholesale liquor and wine interests, at Chicago, issue of February 16, 1907, on page 31, is the following:

"The agricultural appropriation bill as prepared this year contained the usual provision for the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists and such other experts as he might deem necessary, to ascertain the purity of food products and determine what are regarded as adulterations therein and to establish standards therefor. When this provision was reached in considering the bill, however, on January 29, Congressman Bartlett, of Georgia, and Congressman Crumpacker, of Indiana, each raised the point of order that there is no law to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a standard, and the provision was therefore stricken out of the bill.

"Unless the item is restored in the Senate by legerdemain on the part of lobbyists and then agreed to by the House, the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to fix standards is terminated, and no standards of any kind can be fixed by him."

The Grocery World, of Philadelphia, in its issue for February 18, 1907, has an article with headlines as follows:

"Extract manufacturers are fighting power to fix standards. Get clause stricken out of appropriation bill which gives Secretary of Agriculture right to fix standards of purity. Doctor Stearns, well-known chemist and agent of the American Extract Manufacturers' Association, says standards already promulgated have no validity."

The article goes on to say:

"Under the rules of the national House of Representatives such a clause as this can be stricken out of the appropriation bill on a point of order. Doctor Stearns had the point of order made and the clause dropped out."

Mr. SPOONER. I care nothing about it, except for one

Mr. SPOONER. I care nothing about it, except for one thing. I endeavored, as did other Senators—notably the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Platt, who is now dead—to perfect by various suggestions the pure-food law. I endeavored to do so because I thought it was vital to that law that some standard be fixed by the law itself or provided for in order to make it of efficacy. I was advertised throughout the nation as an enemy, opponent, industrious and infamous, of the pure-food law; and I am not surprised, having read to the Senate the decision which I did just before the bill passed the Senate, that it has been thought necessary, which I believe it is, that the power to establish standards be included in the law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I was one of the Senators who made the point of order, I wish to say a word. I was heartily in favor of the pure-food law, but this is an attempt in this amendment to establish a maker of standards.

an enormous power to put in the hands of one man.

Mr. SPOONER. The whole thing is an enormous power.

Mr. LODGE. Well, I know it is, Mr. President. It is an enormous power. If we are going to give a governmental board the power to establish standards, we ought to do it by very careful legislation and not by a paragraph in an appropriation bill in the last days of a short session. It is one of the greatest powers that can be conferred. It affects hundreds and thousands of people and industries throughout the country. That there ought to be a bureau of standards I have no doubt; but I think it ought to be done by a well-considered piece of legislation and not by a loose paragraph in an appropriation bill which puts the power to make the standards in the hands of one man.

Mr. PROCTOR. I beg the Senator's pardon. I do not think it places it in the hands of one man by any means.

Mr. SPOONER. It does not.

Mr. LODGE. It places it in the hands of one man.
Mr. PROCTOR. Allow me to finish a sentence. A board was established, with Mr. Freer, of the University of Pennsylvania, at the head of it, and that board, composed of very able chemists, established the standards. Those standards have no force whatever only as definitions and as being advisory. They have no force in court. No complaints can be made on

I must appeal to the Senator from Vermont and all other Senators, if they expect to pass this bill, not to discuss matters which are not before the Senate and can not be before the Senate in any form. If we expect to pass this bill, let us go ahead and decide the questions which are now

Mr. LODGE. I had no desire to discuss the pure-food law or this amendment, but the discussion had been opened, and as I was one of those who made the point of order I did not desire to be put in any false position in regard to it. The clause here provides for the collaboration of a committee of the association of chemists. They have no authority. The power is given to the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the standards. They are simply put in as an advisory board, and I think before we pass legislation of that sort we ought to consider it very carefully. It ought to go to the appropria reported here on a well-considered scheme, Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President— It ought to go to the appropriate committee and be

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do. Mr. McCUMBER. I want to explain simply one thing about which there seems to be a misunderstanding with respect to these standards. There were but one or two standards fixed in the pure-food law itself, and those were the standards which were to determine the definitions of "adulteration" and "mis-It allowed everything to go into the market which branding." would measure up to those definitions and everything was to be kept out of the market which did not measure up to those particular standards. Why was there no mention of any standard in the pure-food bill? For this reason: We already had upon the statute books a law which had been enacted year after year authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to fix standards, and the Secretary of Agriculture had been fixing standards for years under that law, and we did not interfere with it in the pure-food law. But what were those standards? Not for the purpose of guiding the courts. That is what was sought to be interjected into the pure-food law-a standard which would control the court-and it was thought best not to allow the Secretary or anyone else to fix standards at the present time. But it has been the law for a good many years, until it was taken out, as it appears, last year, that the Secretary could fix standards which would guide him in determining first, what was adulteration, and secondly, what things could be considered as injurious to any food products and what was the highest standard of food products, simply for the information of the public. He has done that right along.

I do not know for how many years this appeared in the appropriation bill, but it appeared in it for a number of consecutive years, and no harm has followed it. No possible harm could follow if the Secretary was allowed to say to-day what, in his opinion, were the highest standards of any food products; and that authority ought to be granted him.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly no harm followed it. It was advisory

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all. Mr. SPOONER. It did not make a rule the violation of which subjected a citizen to prosecution and punishment.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; and it could not now.
Mr. SPOONER. The pure-food act does.
Mr. McCUMBER. The pure-food act does not adopt any standard by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SPOONER. I say it does not, but it is full of penalties and provisions for prosecutions.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but the penalties apply to the violation of the provisions contained in the law itself and the definitions, and not to any standards that may be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not that ex necessitate rei involve a standard?

Mr. McCUMBER. No. It involves no other standard than that fixed in the law itself, and whether we grant or withhold the right to fix a standard of purity by the Secretary of Agriculture would not affect the pure-food law one way or the other. The standards fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, if this should become a law, would not be standards which would govern the courts in determining what are adulterations and what are misbrandings, because that is all that is legislated against.

Mr. SPOONER. I agree to that. Did not the pure-food bill, as it came from the House, contain a provision for standards?

Mr. McCUMBER. It did, and we struck them out.

Mr. PROCTOR. If anything could convince me that we ought to adopt standards, it would be the nature of the objections that were raised in committee. The representatives of blended whisky and neutral whisky were particularly active with a lawyer here. I had in two days from one Senator referred to me twenty-six letters from manufacturers of candythose who used improper coloring matter-and I had a great many others, nearly fifty in all; but I considered the matter as disposed of by the point of order, and I did not wish to oc-cupy any more time in regard to it. The discussion was started by somebody else.

I move that the Senate take a recess until 8.15 o'clock p. m., for the further consideration of this measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont, that the Senate take a recess until 8.15 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8.15 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

IMMIGRATION COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the provisions of the immigration act approved February 20, 1907, the Chair appoints as the members on the part of the Senate of the commission created by that law the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I present a memorial of the legislature of Wyoming, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on the Philippines, as follows:

Whereas a bill is now pending in the Senate of the United States which proposes to allow the importation into the United States of the sugar of the Philippine Islands upon the payment of only 25 per cent of the regular duty on sugar, and for the importation into the United States of sugar from the Philippine Islands without the payment of any duty whatever after the 11th of April, 1909; and

INTERMARRIED WHITE CITIZENS OF CHEROKEE NATION.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I present a memorial of intermar-ried white citizens of the Cherokee Nation; which I ask may be printed in the Record, printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed as a document and printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL OF THE INTERMARRIED WHITE CITIZENS OF THE CHEROKEE NATION.

NATION.

Your memorialists respectfully represent:
That the Supreme Court of the United States in its decision of November 5, 1906, in the case of Daniel Red Bird, The Cherokee Nation, et al. v. The United States, held that—
The rights and privileges of those white citizens who intermarried with Cherokee citizens subsequent to the 1st day of November, 1875, do not extend to the right of soil or interest in any of the vested funds of the Cherokee Nation, and such intermarried persons are not entitled to share in the allotment of the lands or in the distribution of any of the funds belonging to said nation, and are not entitled to be enrolled for such purpose; that those white persons who intermarried with Delaware or Shawnee citizens of the Cherokee Nation, either prior or subsequent to November 1, 1875, and those who intermarried with Cherokees by blood and subsequently, being left a widow or widower, by the death of the Cherokee wife or husband, intermarried with persons not of Cherokee blood, and those white men who having married Cherokee women and subsequently abandoned their Cherokee wives have no part or share in the Cherokee property and are not entitled to participate in the allotment of the lands or in the distribution of the funds of the Cherokee Nation or people and are not entitled to be enrolled for such purpose.

Your memorialists further represent that there are on the approved rolls of the Cherokee Nation 35,949 citizens entitled to enrollment under the act of July 1, 1902, and pending applications for 1,178, making a total of 37,127 persons who might be entitled to take allotments under the act of July 1, 1902.

That there would remain lands of the Cherokee Nation unallotted, after all of said persons had taken their allotments, sufficient to equal about 2,000 additional allotments.

That there are of the intermarried white persons affected by the decision of the Supreme Court, as above referred to, about 3,000 in number.

decision of the Supreme Court, as above referred to, about 3,000 in number.

That said enrolled white persons desire to purchase allotments from the Cherokee Nation so as to include the lands on which they have erected or acquired improvements prior to the institution of the said suit in the Court of Claims above referred to.

That the business committee of the Delaware Indians, on the 21st day of December, 1906, sent a memorial to the President of the United States containing the following:

"And in addition to the above request, we most respectfully submit that as a result of a law and custom of our people forbidding the intermarriage of persons of the same clan (there being only three clans in our tribe) many of our people were required to intermarry with white people. These white people, husbands or wives of Delaware women or men, until the recent Supreme Court decision, supposed, and had a right to suppose, they had an allotment of land coming to them, on which they have placed, many times with the funds of Delaware Indians, valuable improvements. These white people have helped to rear and support many of our families and are now as endeared to us as our own people.

which they have placed, many times with the funds of Delaware Indians, valuable improvements. These white people have helped to rear and support many of our families and are now as endeared to us as our own people.

"Therefore we most respectfully request that some fair and reasonable legislation be enacted that will enable the said white people to purchase from the Cherokee Nation the allotments they had a right to expect. This, we think, would be fair and just and tend to the betterment of the peace and prosperity of our country."

Therefore William P. McClellan, representing the intermarried white citizens, does hereby petition the Congress of the United States that legislation be enacted that will give equitable relief to the said intermarried whites in so far as they may avail themselves of the same on or before four months from the date of the passage of this act, by paying into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the Cherokee Nation, the sum of $650 for each allotment on which said intermarried whites have valuable improvements, provided, that this right shall be limited to take allotments under the act of July 1, 1902, or as many thereof as are found entitled to allotments, have been provided for.

W. P. McCuellan,

W. P. McClellan, Representing the Intermarried White Citizens of the Cherokee Nation.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that House bill 24815, the agricultural appropriation bill, be now taken up.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908

Mr. PROCTOR. Before the recess we were discussing the addition to the general expenses of the Forestry Service, the amendment on page 41. I hope the Senate is ready for a vote

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The Secretary. On page 41, line 12, before the words "seven hundred," insert the words "one million."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it; and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HEYBURN. I will call for the yeas and nays on the amendment to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that the vote by which the amendment on line 13, page 41, was agreed to was reconthe amendment on the 13, page 41, was agreed to was reconsidered, so that the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, in line 13, to strike out the words "fifty-seven thousand three" and insert "fifty-six thousand eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How are we proceeding with the bill? Are we considering the amendments in their order, or are we just jumping

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was read through for action on the committee amendments. In the course of the reading certain committee amendments were passed over by request. The Senate is now considering the amendments which were passed over.

passed over.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Are they being considered in the order in which they appear in the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They are considered in the order in which they appear in the bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand that it is the minor amendment on page 41, striking out "fifty-seven thousand three" and inserting "fifty-six thousand eight," that is first under consideration. sideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment is now under consideration. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
Mr. GALLINGER. What is the amendment?

What is the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is on line 13, page 41. The committee amendment strikes out "fifty-seven thousand three" and inserts "fifty-six thousand eight," correcting the total.

The amendment was agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that the total in lines 15 and 16 on page 42 has not been agreed to. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 42, lines 15 and 16, in the total for Forest Service, strike out "three hundred and ninety-nine" and insert "nine hundred;" so as to read:

Total for Forest Service, $1,900,000.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand the addition of $1,000,000 has been agreed to. I suppose the Secretary can correct the totals.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

Does the Senator from Vermont The VICE-PRESIDENT. yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to the last amendment that has not yet been announced by the Chair, on page 42, lines 15 and 16.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this amendment relates to the one that was just passed upon and upon which I called for the yeas and nays. I desire to give notice that before any vote is taken upon the amendment adding $1,000,000 to the amount stated in lines 12 and 13, on page 41, I shall ask that the Senate shall be present and that a vote by year and nays shall be taken on that amendment, because we have not been discussing this question for several days here in vain or merely for the purpose of talking. We desire that the Senate shall pass upon that amendment, and that the Senate shall be present when it does pass upon it.

Mr. PROCTOR. This is a committee amendment, and of course it can come up in the Senate.
Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PROCTOR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana rise to the amendment on page 42?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I rise to make an inquiry. On line 24, page 41, I understand $1,000,000 has been added to the appropriation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. One million was added in line 12, page 41.

Mr. HEMENWAY. On page 42, in lines 2 and 3, the appropriation of $1,000,000 recommended by the committee was stricken out by action of the Senate, and the House provision appropriating $500,000 was restored. Has any change been made in that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No change has been made.

Mr. PROCTOR. Not any; there is not any proposed.
Mr. HEYBURN. The Senate added it on and doubled the appropriation in another place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in lines 15 and 16 on page 42.

Mr. CLAY. I do not know that I exactly understand these amendments. On page 41, line 12, before the words "seven hundred and fifty-six thousand eight," we have inserted "one million." Is that correct?

Mr. PROCTOR. That is correct.

Mr. CLAY. Then on line 24 of the same page the appropriation still stands at $900,000?

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand that the total there for salaries and general expenses is to be corrected by the Secretary. Am I right about that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary has no authority to make the change. It is an amendment that must be moved and voted upon in the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move, then, to make it conform to the amendment in line 24 and that "one million" be inserted.

Mr. HEYBURN. On what page is that?

Mr. CLAY. Page 41.
Mr. PROCTOR. Line 24.
The Secretary. Before the words "nine hundred" in the committee amendment on page 41, line 24—
Mr. CLAY. With the chairman's permission, I do not catch exactly what we are doing. If that amendment is adopted, I desire to ask the Chair whether the appropriation on page 42, line 3, will stand at $1,000,000 or $500,000?

Mr. PROCTOR. It stands at $500,000.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to ask if we are adding $1,000,000 to this appropriation. I was not present the entire session this even-ing while the discussion was going on. I should like to ask the chairman what becomes of the money realized from the sale of timber, etc.

Mr. PROCTOR. After the 1st day of July it all goes into the

Mr. CLAY. I presume, then, this appropriation of $1,000,000 is added for the purpose of taking its place?

Mr. PROCTOR. It is.
Mr. CLAY. I think I catch the idea of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont proposes an amendment changing the total in line 24, page 41, which will be stated.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if these large gross sums are to be insisted upon I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Dolliver	Heyburn	Proctor
Beveridge	Dubois	Kean	Rayner
Burkett	Frazier	Kittredge	Scott
Carter	Fulton	Knox	Simmons
Clark, Wyo.	Gallinger	Lodge	Stone
Clay	Gamble	Long	Warren
Culberson	Hansbrough	Patterson
Curtie	Hemenway	Piles	000

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Thirty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the absentees be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts requests that the absentees be called.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators. Mr. DOLLIVER. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. Allison] is necessarily detained from the Senate this evening.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. I think it is only proper to state that there are Senators detained at home who are sick. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] is at my hotel, and I know he is not able to come out, and I know the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MILLARD] is not able to be here.

Mr. LODGE. The Sergeant-at-Arms is, of course, aware of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

.Mr. SCOTT. Yes; the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller].

After a delay of several minutes,

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is now almost 9 o'clock, and sixteen Senators would have to be added to the list to make a quorum. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KEAN. I trust the Senator will not insist on that motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 23, 1907, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, February 22, 1907.

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.
The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, our Heavenly Father, for all the manifestations of Thy wisdom, power, and goodness round about us, but especially for those qualities of mind and soul which in great crises lift men above the sordid, above the selfish, and make them Godlike; that such a man was our revered Washington; strong in his intellectual gifts, strong in his moral character, strong in his fidelity to truth and justice, pure in his religious aspirations; a soldier, a statesman, a high-minded Christian gentleman whom we delight to call the "Father of his Country." He lived well, wrought well, and died beloved by a nation and respected and honored by all the world. Shine on, O soul divine, in thine immortal glory, that generations to come may copy thy virtues and emulate thy example. Hear us, our Father, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 17285. An act for the relief of Second Lieut. Gouverneur V. Packer, Twenty-fourth United States Infantry; and H. R. 25513. An act extending the time for making final proof in certain desert-land entries.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 8182) authorizing the Twin City Power Company to build two dams across the Savannah River above the city of Augusta, in the State of Georgia.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

INFORMATION REGARDING PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask the present consideration of the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida rises to a question of privilege, and offers the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 823.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the House of Representatives at the earliest possible day the following information:

A statement of the amount of money expended by the United States for equipment, supplies, military operations in the Philippine Islands, and all other expenditures of any character whatsoever expended by the United States in, for, or on account of said Philippine Islands in any manner, from the date of the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain to the present time.

between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain to the present time.

Also a statement of the amount of revenue of any and every character received by the United States from or on account of the Philippine Islands since the date of the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain to the present time, together with the amount expended in and about the collection or receipt of the same, so as to show the net amount of such revenue so received during the period aforesaid.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker-The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. MANN. Is it a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is just trying to ascertain to what committee it was referred.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The resolution was introduced on the 8th of February and sent to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and no report has been made.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's motion is to discharge the committee, as the Chair understands.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida moves to discharge the Committee on Insular Affairs from the further consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. My motion was for the discharge of the committee and for the present consideration of the resolu-

The SPEAKER. That is just what has been agreed to, otherwise it is with the committee, and it is a question of privilege to move to discharge the committee; and that is the motion that has just been put.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to address myself to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida. Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I introduced in this House a bill providing for the sale of the Philippine Islands to Japan or some other foreign power which would pay the United States therefor the $20,000,000 which under the terms of the treaty of peace between this country and the Kingdom of Spain we paid to the latter country for the islands mentioned, and in addition thereto the amount of money expended by us since the bargain and sale referred to in the construction of permanent improvements on said islands. bill went to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and it is still I never expected it to be reported by that committee. I never expected that committee to even consider it, but I did expect the American people to consider it, and they are doing so from one end of this country to the other; and whether this particular bill meets the requirements of the situation or not, there can be no question, considering the press of the country as the mirror in which is reflected the public opinion of the land, that the masses of our people have reached the conclusion that we must relinquish these oriental possessions.

Following the introduction of this bill I introduced a resolution calling on the Secretary of War to furnish the House with a statement showing what the retention of the Philippines has cost us since we took possession. That resolution also went to the Committee on Insular Affairs and has quietly been resting there for more than two weeks past. I had no idea that it would ever be reported. There seems to be a reluctance to give the people of this country the facts in relation to the expense incurred in the government of these islands, and without that information I desire to submit a few remarks with reference to the general situation.

I shall not undertake at this time to discuss the causes which produced our late war with Spain. No matter what the cause, no matter whether originally our cause was just or not, no matter whether by the exercise of wise diplomacy it could have been avoided and the thousands of American lives and millions of American treasure saved from sacrifice, it came, and the sons of the Republic from every nook and corner of our broad land patriotically responded to the call of country, and within a few short months the proud old Kingdom of Spain, with her colors trailing in the dust of defeat, was prostrate at the feet of American soldiery suing for mercy. In comparison with the nations of the earth we had at the outbreak of that war no large standing army and no navy commensurate with the needs of a country lying broadside to two oceans in such manner as to expose us to the attack of every well-equipped navy upon the high seas. Our experience at that time convinces me that the safety of a nation lies not so much in the size of its standing army, the equipment of its naval forces, and the completeness of its coast defenses as in the patriotic love of its people. When governments, of whatever nature, begin to lose the respect, confidence, and love of the people, at that selfsame moment such governments begin to decay, and when one, whether monarchy or republic, can only be held together by a show of glittering bayonets upon the land and the frowning cannon upon the decks of sea monsters beneath every sky, then it requires no prophet to foretell that the days of that government are numbered. These United States are so circumstanced in location, so rich in agriculture, in manufactures, in mines, and in every other quality which goes to make a people great, powerful, and independent that as long as we adhere to that fundamental principle of the Republic of staying at home, attending to our own business, and allowing other peoples to attend to theirs, we can with a very small standing army and a very modest navy successfully defy the combined armies of the Old World. But when the very flower of the Spanish navy went down at Manila and Santiago and Spain lay prostrate at our feet, the Republican party, being in full possession of every branch of our Government, became recklessly drunken with the wine of conquest, and started us as a nation for a journey on strange and unknown seas. The fathers of the Republic never dreamed that the time would come when the people of the United States would embark in the business of acquiring and governing territory more than 8,000 miles from our shores, and that, too, without the consent of the people to be governed.

Why, Mr. Speaker, there can be no just government without the consent of the people governed, and indeed, sir, this contention on the part of our forefathers was the impelling cause which forced the people of the thirteen original colonies to secede from the British Government and declare themselves to be "free and independent States." For seven long years of bloody war with the mother country the Revolutionary patriots contended for this principle, established it upon these shores, and bequeathed it to us as a priceless heritage. Yet one hundred and thirty years after this revolt against tyranny and the establishment here of the best Government in all the world, we find the Republican party in absolute control of every department of the Government undertaking to govern and control, without their consent, 10,000,000 of people of an alien race and more than 8,000 miles away! This is a complete subversion of the purposes of our creation as a Government, and the sooner we abandon the colonial policy and send to the rear with a "get thee behind me Satan" our dreams of becoming a great "world power" on the seas of militarism and imperialism, the better will it be for the future of our beloved country. [Applause,]

Our destiny is to become a "world power" among the nations of the earth, but let us fervently hope that we shall become such by virtue of our superiority in agriculture, manufactures, mines, commerce, education, Christian living, and other like things which go to make a people really and truly great. Let us abandon for all time the bluster and braggadocio of the bully and take our rightful stand at the head of all nations in the glorious march toward the goal of lasting universal peace.

[Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, we can not assume this position and carry with us in international conferences the weighty influence that should attend the United States as long as we persist in the policy of governing and holding in subjection to our will and against their protest millions of people who have absolutely nothing in common with us and who are, and must remain, thousands of miles from us. If on that historic morning in May some nine years ago the gallant Dewey, after destroying the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay, had quietly saided away, leaving the Filipino to "work out his own salvation," thousands of American lives and millions of American treasure would have been saved to us and we would not now be engaged in the task policy of governing and holding in subjection to our will and been saved to us and we would not now be engaged in the task of building huge sea monsters at an enormous expense to ourselves and to the serious detriment of our own internal improvements for the sole purpose of protecting the "little brown man" from the avarice of eastern nations in order that American plutocrats and trust magnates may exploit him and his. [Applause on Democratic side.] One of the noblest traits in the character of the true man is to promptly acknowledge his mistake when he finds he has made one, and then set himself to the task of righting the wrongs which have resulted therefrom. A political party or a nation should do no less, and the whole civilized world ever stands ready to applaud such an act.

The original purchase of the Philippine Islands by our Government was a serious blunder and a most grievous wrong—wrong to the Filipino, wrong to our people, and wrong to all the nations of the earth. More than eight years of possession and attempted government on our part has demonstrated the folly of our continuance of the experiment a day longer, and the question now is, Has the Republican party the courage to "right-about face" on this question and sell or otherwise dispose of this "gold brick" which was worked off on us by pose of this "gold brick" which was worked off on us by Spain in the Paris treaty and for which we handed her twenty millions of good American dollars?

It is utterly impossible, Mr. Speaker, to secure from the War Department any statement of the money of the people of these United States that has been expended by this present Administration in and on account of the Philippines, either on account of permanent public improvements or on account of current expenses for the equipment and maintenance of our Army in the islands, the equipment and maintenance of our great naval establishment, made necessary by our ownership of the archipelago, and other expenditures that we have been forced to undergo by virtue of our ownership of this foreign and distant

Why all this secrecy? Have not the people of this country the right to know the amount of their money being expended by their servants, how and where it has been and is being expended, and all about it? Surely we are traveling on a strange road when the creature can and does defy the creator; when the agent flatly denies the right of his principal to know what disposition has been made of the funds of the principal which have been committed to the keeping of the agent and the servant stoutly refuses to make an accounting to his master! There is no shadow of reason why the people should not know how much of their money has been spent in or on account of the Philippine Islands, in what manner it has been spent, and in fact everything in any wise pertaining to our occupation of these islands. Without the data which has been asked for, and not obtained, I think it is entirely safe to say that in addition to the $20,000,000 paid Spain out of the Treasury of the United States in pursuance of the terms of the Paris treaty, which was the purchase price of these lands, and the "little brown men" thrown in for good measure, we have expended three or four times the purchase price in improving and retaining them. While millions of the people's money can be and is being spent in the building of good roads and other internal improvements in these far-away islands, it seems to be utterly impossible to get the "powers that be" to appropriate one penny for good roads in our own land.

Gentlemen prate about the duties we owe to the Filipinos, and they seem willing to deplete the Treasury of the United States in the maintenance of an immense Army and Navy, in the construction of coast defenses, and in building permanent improvements on these islands for the sole benefit of this alien race, which has nothing in common with us, and to whom we owe absolutely nothing.

When we purchased these islands and this alien race with them, the deed was nothing more nor less than traffic in human beings, and it is no greater wrong for individuals to traffic in humanity than it is for nations to make bargain and sale of human beings. The purchase of these islands and the people who inhabit them was a great moral wrong on the part of this great Christian country; it was a great wrong to our form of government; it was a great wrong to humanity, and it placed a black stain upon our own boasted civilization. Having committed this wrong and knowing now that it is wrong, what does the dominant party intend to do with this distant territory and this alien people? What will you do with this brown man of the Orient? Have you evolved a policy as to your own future relations with him? If you have, do you not think it is about time for you to take the American people—your masters—into your confidence and tell them what that policy is? If you have not, after more than eight years of effort, evolved some policy, don't you think you ought to candidly admit your inability to deal with the subject, and at least give the suggestions of others for a solution of the problem a fair test?

Mr. Speaker, I can conceive of but three ways in which to dispose of this vexatious problem, which the shrewd diplomacy of Spain and the asinine blundering of the Republican party has saddled upon us [applause on Democratic side], viz:

First. To incorporate the Philippine Islands and the inhabitants thereof as a part of the United States, giving to those people every right and privilege enjoyed under the Constitution by our own people; Second. To hold the Philippine Islands and the people who inhabit them as the property of the United States, under some sort of colonial government, in which these people shall have no voice; and

Third. To dispose of the Philippine Islands and the people who inhabit them, either to the Filipinos themselves, Japan, or any other eastern nation that may desire them, for whatever we can get toward reducing the enormous financial loss we have incurred on account of our original investment, reserving at some desirable place a coaling and naval station. And I want to say right here, Mr. Speaker, that the fact of our buying the Philippine Islands, and holding them only a few days, put this country, and the Congress representing it, in the embarrassing position of enacting legislation which sought to throttle the power of a sovereign State at the behest of the Mikado of Japan. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This boasted world power, this great American Republic, doing the bidding of Japan, and in the doing of it strangling the sover-eignty out of a great State of this Union. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Here are three highways open for us to travel. Which shall it be? Which is best for us? I say, "Which is best for us," because I believe that our first duty is to ourselves, and we have no right, legal or moral, to spend millions of the people's money to ameliorate the condition of others to whom we owe nothing, while our own people are staggering under the burdens of government and begging for necessary internal improvements. "Charity begins at home," and, I will add, should stay at home until the wants and necessities of the home people have been fully met and supplied. Looking at this question from the view point of what is best for us, what says the party in power? Which road shall we take? Shall it be the first? Shall we take this brown man into the family circle and make him one of us? Surely not. And yet, without altering our whole form of government, I do not see how we can keep him at all except it be on terms of perfect political equality.

Are gentlemen ready to admit this brown man of the Orient to citizenship in the United States upon terms of perfect political equality with themselves and their race? The proud Caucasian race planted the seeds of liberty in this Western Hemi-sphere which took deep root and flourished, until now behold the most majestic tree of liberty which adorns the forest of nations. Have gentlemen no pride of race? Are you willing to admit that the African, the Mongolian, and the Asiatic is your equal? Are you willing to assimilate with these people? With no pride of your race and with no love of your past, do you intend to attempt the alteration of the eternal decree of God Almighty in his placing the seal of superiority upon the white man? [Applause on the Democratic side.] If you do so intend, and you should be successful in carrying out your policy, what would you accomplish? You would only succeed in dragging the white man down to the level of the African, the Mongolian, and the Asiatic, and the future citizen of these United States would be a mongrel, not entitled to the respect of decent people

I have no patience, Mr. Speaker, with that class of my race who, for the enjoyment of a "little brief authority" secured by pandering to the whims of a few addle-brained fanatics and the impossible demands of inferior races, would consign their posterity to a status which the Creator never intended them to occupy. Two totally distinct races of people, the one the superior of the other, never have and never will live together under one government upon terms of perfect equality, either political or social.

Mr. Lincoln, I believe, said that "the Republic can not exist half slave and half free." Neither can the Republic exist with one half of its citizenship composed of the proud Caucasian race and the other half composed of the African, Mongolian, and Asiatic races under laws seeking to compel absolute po-litical or social equality. Neither can the Republic exist with one half citizen and the other half serf. In order for this Re-public to exist and go onward to the goal of its high destiny among the peoples of the earth the bars must be put up and none allowed to come to us from other lands to make their homes with us in this God-favored land, except those of the white race who can assimilate with us, thus giving us a homogenous population and insuring the preservation of the integrity of our civilization.

If then, Mr. Speaker, we are to preserve the integrity of our race and save our institutions for the benefit of humanity in the coming centuries we can not take this alien from the faraway islands of the Pacific into our household as a real member of the family and upon terms of perfect social or political

Does the dominant party-intend to adopt the second plan I have mentioned? Do you intend to forever hold these people as your property, controlling and governing them without their consent in order that American money sharks may continue to plunder them? Do you think that the holding in subjection to your will by force of arms of this distant allen race is in consonance with our form of government? What warrant have we under the Constitution of this great Republic to either own or control this alien and unassimilable race? Where our history does the Republican party find authority for the establishment of colonies and colonial forms of government? Why, Mr. Speaker, within the last few days I have heard gentlemen upon the floor of this House speak of our "colonial possessions? This smacks of empire. It breathes of imperialism. It suggests royalty. It does not indicate the simplicity of republican government, where every citizen is a sovereign, but it publican government, where every citizen is a sovereign, but it produces visions of kingly rule. Has the experiment of "government of the people, by the people, and for the people proven to be a failure? Was George III right and our forefathers wrong in 1776? Have we been mistaken for more than a century in our contention that the people should rule?

Is the Republican party willing to go to the country with the declaration that it is the purpose of that party to perpetuate a colonial form of government in the Philippine Islands? If not, then when do you propose to make a change? What do you propose to substitute for the present form of rule in the islands? You can not maintain the present status and preserve the Republic, because "colonial possessions" have no place in a republican form of government. If, however, we propose to dis-card for the future our republican government and clothe ourselves in the habiliments of the empire, have we counted the cost of maintaining these distant island possessions? In time of profound peace this precious property has cost us millions upon millions of money, and the end is not yet. If, unfortunately, we should be plunged into war with some strong eastern power, "our colonial possessions" would fall an easy prey to the enemy before we could get our forces well started across the seas, and then it would probably bankrupt us to retake them, as retake them we would, no matter what the cost in both blood and treasure. Is it good policy for us to continue in the "colonial-possession" business at so frightful a cost as confronts us? We say we want peace with all nations, yet our ownership of the Philippine Islands is a constant invitation for war to every east-We have planted ourselves 8,000 miles from home "with a chip on our shoulders," daily challenging all the nations of the East to "knock it off." Can we afford to continue this performance? Shall we by its continuance abandon the form of government established by the fathers of the Republic, and which by careful nurture has made for us the grandest and most powerful government beneath the sun? No; a thousand times no, Mr. Speaker.

What then shall be our course? If it were in my power to provide a solution of this vexed problem, I would sell the Philippine Islands, only reserving a coaling and naval station, for what I could get, and thus reduce the amount of the losses we have already incurred by the amount received from the purchaser and escape the future millions of losses which their retention will inevitably bring to us. I would give the Filipinos the first opportunity to buy, and if they did not or could not buy, I would then offer them to Japan or some other eastern nation, and if I could not find a purchaser at all, I would simply withdraw and leave the "little brown man" of the Orient alone in his glory to "work out his own salvation with fear and trembling."

We have one race question already to solve, Mr. Speaker, and why will certain politicians insist on giving us another? Why not let us work out a just and proper solution of the one which is now with us, and which has challenged the best thought of our wisest statesmen for more than fifty years, before we fly to the Far East in search of another one? So for as I am concerned, I know that I have nothing but the kindliest feeling for the brown man of the Philippines and the black man of continental America; I know that my people wish them no harm, and would elevate rather than degrade them. We have shown this by taxing our people for more than forty years to build and maintain schools for negro children; we have aided them constantly in the building and maintenance of their churches; we have in every conceivable way endeavored to lift them up in the scale of morality and right living. done everything in our power to ameliorate their condition, except to sacrifice the integrity of our race by receiving them as our social equals, and, we might as well be plain, this we shall never do so long as the world shall stand. There is no power under the sun that can make us do that, because the time will never come when we, our children, and our children's children, down to the latest generation, and to the time when the angel Gabriel shall announce to a listening world that time shall be no more, would not prefer death and complete extermination, rather than amalgamation with this inferior people. {Ap-

While I am dealing with this subject, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention briefly to two bills that have been introduced in this House during the present Congress. I refer to the bills introduced respectively by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bennet], each bill having for its object the reduction of representation from the Southern States in this House and in the Electoral College on account of the alleged suppression of the negro vote in those States. I believe that both of the gentlemen in their bills name, among others, the State of Florida, and they propose to give my State only two Representatives in this House instead of the three she is entitled to and now has. Why do these gentlemen propose this proceeding as to Florida? They say that we have disfranchised the negro in Florida. In what way has the negro in Florida been disfranchised? I make the unqualified statement that neither of the gentlemen can point out a single line either in the constitution of Florida or the statute law of Florida which disfranchises the negro or which directly or indirectly seeks so to do.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not now speaking to his resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Olmsted). The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the gentleman from Florida is not speaking to his resolution. The point of order seems to be well taken.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from New York was not listening and does not know what the gentleman from Florida was talking about.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Florida was recognized in his own right and has the right to proceed for one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman was recognized in his own right, and has one hour to speak upon his resolution, but not upon the question of representation in Florida. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to be heard for a moment on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is very clear, and the gentleman will be recognized to speak to his resolution. The Chair does not care to hear argument on the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All right. If the Chair decides I can not be heard, it is perfectly agreeable to me. I want to show that these gentlemen do not know what they were talking about. That is all. But, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York does not want to hear it I shall have to be content. I have been at some trouble to secure some little information as to the money that has been expended in the Philippine Islands. This Committee on Insular Affairs declines to deal with it; they decline to allow the people of this country to ask what the Secretary of War has done with their money, but I have been enabled to find out something about it, and I will inform the House as to it.

INCREASED EXPENDITURES DUE TO IMPERIALISM.

1. Army and Navy.—The most striking illustration of the unwisdom of the colonial policy is found in the fact that the appropriations for military and naval purposes were more than three times as great in 1906 as they were in 1898, before we unfortunately entered upon that evil policy.

unfortunately entered upon that evil policy.

In 1898 the appropriation for the Military Academy at West Point was $479,572. In 1906 it was $1,664,707, about three and one-half times as great as it was in 1898. And this increase at the fountain head is kept up all down the stream. In 1898 the appropriation for the Army was $23,129,344. In 1906 it was $71,817,165, an increase of $48,687,399. The appropriation in 1906 was not quite three times as great as that of 1898. As to the Navy, the appropriation in 1898 was $33,003,234. In 1906 it was $102,091,670, an increase of $69,088,436, considerably more than three times as great as it was in 1898—three millions and nearly eighty-three thousand dollars more than three times as great.

The increase cost of these three items, due to our colonial policy, and due mainly to our occupation of the Philippines, in respect of which alone we are threatened with international complications and wars, is therefore, in the aggregate, $175,773,542 a year at this time, and the expense is still growing.

2. Other expenses.—But the vast sum of $175,773,542 a year does not by any means measure the whole increase due to this new venture in world politics. Our pension list has grown and will continue to grow as long as we hold the islands, thus entailing a permanent increase of taxation. We have paid out $3,000,000 to relieve the people of the islands from famine caused by our policy of "reconcentration," borrowed from General Weyler—from Weyler the beast, who devastated Cuba, and thereby brought us into conflict with Spain. We have paid $179,000 for the first Philippine Commission. We have paid $170,000 for coal mines in Batan Island, from which we have so far received no returns. We have paid within the last year $400,000 more than it was worth to transport coal from this country to the Philippines, in order to placate the already overprotected vessel owners of this country, who for the last forty years have had their lobby here at every session of Congress begging for legislation that would exempt them from paying the paltry fees which the States allow pilots at the ports of the country to collect from them in order to maintain a pilotage system for the protection of life and property at sea. How much more we have paid in extortionate transportation charges on other items I do not know, nor does anyone else. We have paid to Spain $20,000,000 for a title to the Archipelago which we had already gained by conquest. We have paid to the friars $7,500,000 for lands there. We have been called upon during the present session of Congress to pay $363,030 for damages to church property in the islands caused by our troops; and we may yet have to pay ten times as much more to satisfy the claims growing out of damages, including damages done by insurrectos, for which the President and the Secretary of War have recommended payment.

Up to June 30, 1903, we had paid out on account of the Philippines not less than $647,599,250, and in the last four years they have undoubtedly cost us half as much more. In all, then, they have cost us not less than $1,000,000,000 in nine years, or about $110,000,000 a year, on an average.

LOSSES IN HEALTH, PRESTIGE, AND NATIONAL CHARACTER.

But this money cost is by no means the greatest burden imposed by our new policy. It is undermining the health and the morality of the nation and impairing its prestige. For eighteen months we kept an army of 71,000 American soldiers in that wretched climate, and aside from deaths in battle, thousands died from disease, and thousands more were afflicted with insanity and other maladies due to climatic causes, and then are put in this outfit over here—St. Elizabeth's—and if I had, Mr. Chairman, thirty minutes' time, I believe I could show that it is so reeking with corruption that even the man in the moon, when he crosses over St. Elizabeth's at night, is compelled to hold his nose.

The army there has been reduced to 15,000; but there are, besides these, between 865 and 1,000 American teachers and 3,300 American officers and employees of the Philippine civil service, making in all nearly 20,000 Americans exposed to the evil effects of residence there, and the number is increasing. This is all bad enough, but it is not the worst. Only a few days ago we saw a bill passed in this House which was the result of a quarrel with Japan. That bill was in effect a confession of weakness and fear on the part of this Government lest Japan should take away from us by force of arms these same islands. It was also the furthest step ever yet taken in the direction of imperialism, for it involved the overthrow of the right of one of the sovereign States of the Union to manage its own schools and an abdication by Congress of its exclusive right to make laws for the government of the United States. piece of legislation has done far more to injure the prestige of this country as a world power than the war with Spain did to increase it, and it has, moreover, discredited the legislative branch of this Government among our own people. Such a price was never before paid for peace by this once proud people of ours, nor would it ever have been paid if we had not become vulnerable by reason of our position in the Philippines.

COMMERCIAL GAINS TRIFLING.

And what have we received in return? We have secured for the shipbuilders and shipowners and army contractors a profit of about 25 per cent on an export trade ranging from $4,500,000 to $12,200,000 a year for seven or eight years and on an import trade ranging from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000 a year for the same period. According to the Statesman's Year-Book for 1906, the value of imports from the Philippine Islands into the United States and of the domestic exports from the United States to the Philippine Islands in the fiscal years 1901 to 1905, inclusive,

-1901, $4,420,912; 1902, $6,612,700; 1903, $11,372,

**Third of the state of the sta tute the only offset to the immense and irreparable losses sustained by this country in the attempt to govern an alien people in a distant land without their consent and in violation of the basic principle of the American Constitution. [Loud applause.]
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this resolution calls for the expenditures of the Government on account of the Philippine Islands since the treaty of peace and also for the revenues received from those islands. Of course every Member of the House knows that this information has been fully covered from time to time in the reports submitted to Congress.
